Mr. Baldry: Since its introduction in July 1990, the Housing Corporation's tenants incentive scheme has helped more than 4,800 housing association tenants move out into homes of their own with grants totalling more than £60 million.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total amount of money allocated to the Housing Corporation for the tenants incentive scheme since its inception.

Mr. Baldry: A total of £110 million, including £44 million for the current financial year, has been allocated to the tenants incentive scheme in the Housing Corporation's approved development programme in the three years since its inception.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the consultation paper on compulsory competitive tendering for housing management and the research on that subject carried out by consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: As part of the citizens charter initiative, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today arranged for the following documents to be placed in the Library of the House: "Competing for Quality in Housing", a consultation paper on compulsory competitive tendering for Housing Management; and "The Scope for Competitive Tendering of Housing Management", a study carried out by consultants for our Departments and for the Scottish Office. Copies of these documents have been sent to all district housing authorities in England and Wales, and to a variety of housing organisations and other interested parties. The paper provides for a consultation period of over three months.

Mundic Concrete

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 19 May, to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith), Official Report, column 70, if he will make a further statement on decisions taken on mundic concrete following the 6 April meeting.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 5 June 1992]: Following the 6 April meeting, technical experts met in Cornwall on 28 April and reached agreement on screening tests for distinguishing mundic material. Work continues on finalising the sampling procedures for identifying harmful aggregates. It is expected that guidance notes covering these matters will be published later this year. It is hoped that the information and guidance in these notes will assist in reducing the number of blighted properties.

London Docklands

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been expended by his Department in the London Docklands development corporation area from the date of its inception until the end of the last financial year.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 4 June 1992]: To the end of 1991-92, the total grant in aid paid to the London Docklands development corporation was £1,349 million. Further resources of £11 million have been made available through the Department's estate action programme to support local authority housing schemes in docklands.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now publish the terms of the master building agreement between the London Docklands development corporation and Olympia and York.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 4 June 1992]: No. The document contains information which is a matter of commercial confidence between the signatories.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

International Fund for Agricultural Development

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current status of negotiations on the International Fund for Agricultural Development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Discussions on the fourth replenishment of IFAD's resources began in Qatar in April and will continue in Rome in July. The United Kingdom will work with others for a successful outcome to these negotiations.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list his public engagements for Monday 11 May.

Mr. Heseltine: I had no public engagements on that day. This enabled me to pay a private visit to the garden festival at Ebbw Vale which I much enjoyed.

RECHAR

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many local authorities in England, Scotland and Wales have been given funds from the RECHAR programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 22 May, 1992 Official Report, column 333.

Maxwell Assets

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will use his powers under the Financial Services Act 1986 to trace and recover Maxwell pension fund moneys and Maxwell family assets which have been removed from United Kingdom control to Liechtenstein control.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Financial Services Act 1986 does not provide powers to trace or enforce the recovery of assets outside the United Kingdom.

Oil Exploration

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licences have been issued for oil exploration off the Isle of Wight that have not found commercial oil deposits.

Mr. Eggar: Six licences have been issued giving rights to explore for oil and gas in the area off the Isle of Wight. Significant discoveries, which may prove to be commercial, have been made under two of these licences. No discoveries have yet been made on the four other licences: exploration is at a very early stage in two of these.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the policy for issuing licences in an environmentally sensitive area where no deposits have been previously discovered.

Mr. Eggar: Before offering any area for licence, my Department consults a range of Government Departments and other interested parties, including fishery associations and the Joint Nature Conservancy Council. As a result of these consultations, some areas may not be released for licensing. Where licences are offered, conditions may be attached to protect environmental or other interests; these may restrict the timing and location of exploration activities. Licensees may also be required to consult local authorities and other relevant bodies before undertaking operations under their licence. Applicants for licences must also satisfy my Department that they are capable of carrying out their planned exploration programme with due regard to environmental concerns.

Concessionary Coal Allowance

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of retired miners' concessionary coal allowances following privatisation of the mining industry and on the arrangements that are available to retired miners who wish to convert to other forms of heating.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O'Brien) on 2 June, Official Report, column 493.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will describe the work that he has undertaken following the publication of the report by the interdepartmental party into the reduction of the bureaucratic burden of registration under the Data Protection Act 1984; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The interdepartmental group which reviewed the operation of the Data Protection Act 1984 disbanded when it had presented its report. Further action must necessarily await the outcome of negotiations on the draft EC directive on data protection, which appeared almost coincidentally with the group's report. However, the report has been a valuable aid in the first round of negotiations. A second draft of the directive is expected to be published in July.

Generating Plants

Mr. Evennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend the generating plant licensing provisions of the Electricity Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Government have no such plans.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to issue a statement on his licensing policy on gas-fired generating stations.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 June 1992]: The Government have made it clear that, in considering an application to construct and operate a generating station, as a general rule, matters such as the need for a generating station, its capacity, choice of fuel to be used and type of plant should be treated as commercial matters for the applicant concerned.

In a news release of 9 March 1992, the Government announced that they may also need to consider whether they should review the use of their powers under the Electricity Act to issue consent to power stations.

That remains the position.

A copy of the news release of 9 March 1992 has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's policy concerning the approval of new non-fossil fuel generating plants.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave today to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan).

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the Director General of Electricity Supply concerning the maximum number, location and total generating capacity from combined cycle gas-fired power stations capable of connection to the national grid without any adverse effect on the stability of the electricity supply system.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 June 1992]: I meet the Director General of Electricity Supply from time to time and discuss issues of mutual interest.

Questions relating to grid code obligations are matters for the National Grid Company and the director general.

Dr. Twinn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those applications lodged with his Department for combined cycle gas turbine power station consents, the date of lodgement and the timetable for processing these applications; and if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the role of gas in the United Kingdom energy market.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 June 1992]: The applications made under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 are as follows:

Site	Applicant	Application made
Plymouth	PowerGen plc	5 October 1990
Staythorpe "C"	National Power plc	16 October 1990
Didcot "B"	National Power plc	14 November 1990
Ardleigh	Eastern Generation Ltd.	17 May 1991
Connah's Quay	PowerGen plc	1 July 1991
Stallingborough	Humber Power Ltd.	18 July 1991
Shoreham	South Coast Power Ltd.	27 September 1991
Seabank	Seabank Power Ltd.	18 October 1991
Greenwich	MetroPower Ltd.	31 October 1991
Trafford	Electricity System Industry Ltd.	31 December 1991
King's Lynn	Eastern Generation Ltd.	15 January 1992
Deeside	Deeside Power Development Co. Ltd.	17 January 1992
Kingsnorth	Kingsnorth Developments	13 March 1992

On timing, each application has to be dealt with on its merits. With respect to the role of gas, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave today to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan).

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what permission has been sought recently by the Atomic Energy Authority research establishment at Harwell to import plutonium 237 from Russia.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 June 1992]: Imports of plutonium by the AEA are covered by an existing import licence.

Electricity Companies

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what discussions he has had with the privatised electricity companies and OFFER about the form and presentation of the companies' accounts;

(2) what advice has been given to the privatised electricity companies by him or OFFER about the valuation of assets for presentation in their accounts.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 June 1992]: The successor companies' reports and accounts will have to be prepared in accordance with the Companies Act 1985 and any additional requirements imposed by the stock exchange.

The enforcement of licence conditions relating to the successor companies' regulatory accounts is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church Land

32. Mr. Flynn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what is his most recent estimate of the total of land in the possession of the Church Commissioners.

Mr. Michael Alison: At 31 December 1991 the commissioners' agricultural portfolio consisted of about 154,000 acres of mostly let farmland.

Church Maintenance

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what is their policy towards the maintenance of redundant and historic churches.

Mr. Michael Alison: Responsibility for the maintenance of Church of England churches in use for worship rests with individual parochial church councils.

The commissioners' policy on redundant churches is governed by legislation, in this case the Pastoral Measure 1983. This provides for the future of the building to be settled by a suitable alternative use; or by preservation by the redundant churches fund; or by care and maintenance by the diocesan board of finance; or, failing these, by demolition.

The Measure lays emphasis on finding a suitable alternative use for the church, if at all possible, and that is what is most commonly achieved. The new owner or lessee will normally be responsible for maintenance and this will be a consideration in determining the future of a redundant church.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts, Chelmsford

38. Mr. Burns: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the provision of magistrates courts in Chelmsford.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is for Essex magistrates courts committee, in consultation with Essex county council, to decide what courthouse accommodation should be provided, and for the council to provide it. I understand that no formal decisions have yet been made about the future of the Chelmsford courthouse.

Law of Property Act 1925

40. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what changes he plans in the Law of Property Act 1925.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is actively considering the report by the Law Commission on continuing obligations under leases and hopes to be able to make an announcement about it in the near future.

Legal Aid

41. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will investigate the cost of the law to individuals who are not eligible for legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In a case which is not covered by legal aid a solicitor's charge is a matter to be agreed with his client. In non-contentious cases a client who feels a solicitor's bill is unreasonable may use the Law Society's free remuneration certification scheme. In addition, in both contentious and non-contentious cases costs can be taxed by the court.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps his Department has taken in response to the report of the Committee of Public Accounts on the working of the criminal legal aid system.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government's response to the report, which was published on 13 May 1992, will be published in the usual manner by way of a Treasury minute. The hon. Member will, however, be aware of the circular on criminal legal aid issued to magistrates courts clerks on 1 April 1992 following the inquiry of the National Audit Office in October of last year and the appearance of the relevant accounting officers before the Public Accounts Committee in January of this year.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what were the percentage of refusals of initial applications for criminal legal aid in magistrates' courts for (a) the four weeks preceding the coming into force of the Lord Chancellor's recent circular on criminal legal aid and (b) the four weeks following that date.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that legal aid is made available to women seeking claims through industrial tribunals.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Advice and assistance, but not representation, is already available under the legal aid "green form" scheme to men and women.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to reduce the length of time taken by the investigations branch of the Legal Aid Board to process cases of suspected fraud by solicitors in relation to legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The investigation of fraudulent claims made by solicitors is a matter for the Legal Aid Board. Those which are subject to police investigation are given priority and close liaison is maintained with the investigating officers.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what information he has on the number of fraud cases pending against solicitors in relation to claims for legal aid under the green form scheme; and what representations he has had from chief constables or their fraud squad chiefs and others in respect of unreasonable delays in computer processing of the information on claims required for such police investigations.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I understand from the Legal Aid Board that there are currently 27 cases under investigation by its fraud investigation branch which relate to alleged offences of fraud under the green form scheme; and that no representations have been received concerning information required for police investigations.

Commonhold

Mr. Gale: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce commonhold law reform in this Session of Parliament.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Queen's Speech confirmed the Government's intention to bring forward legislation in this session to enable leaseholders of flats to acquire the freehold or to extend their leases. A commonhold scheme for the freehold ownership and communal management of flats will follow as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Lockerbie Bombing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what response he has made to the covering letter from Mr. David Leppard of this May enclosing his book "On the Trail of Terror", referring to the Lockerbie bombing.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have not received the book "On the Trail of Terror", or any letter, from its author.

EMPLOYMENT

Employee Financial Participation

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the progress which has been made by the social questions working group which is examining the draft EC recommendation on the promotion of employee participation in profits and enterprise results; and whether the European Commission has set up a working party to examine the possibilities for the creation at European level of formulae for employee financial participation schemes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The social questions working group has completed discussion on the draft recommendation. The recommendation is due to be considered at the Labour and Social Affairs Council on 24 June.

As far as the working party is concerned, while this is no longer mentioned in the draft recommendation, we understand that it is still the Commission's intention to establish such a body, although at this stage there is no indication of when this might be, nor of its precise terms of reference.

Enterprise Allowance

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average weekly rate of enterprise allowance paid by each training and enterprise council in the United Kingdom in each 12-month period since the administration of the enterprise allowance was taken over by the TECs.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is not possible to provide the information in the form required, except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those individuals who have started up businesses through the enterprise allowance in each of the years since its introduction, were still trading (a) after 12 months, (b) after 24 months and (c) after 36 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been awarded moneys through the enterprise allowance scheme in each year from the introduction of the scheme to the current year; and in each of those years, how many people (a) attended enterprise allowance awareness days, (b) applied for enterprise allowance assistance but were refused, (c) were awarded enterprise allowance assistance but had the assistance terminated within the first 12 months and (d) continued to receive enterprise allowance assistance for a full 12-month period.

Mr. McLoughlin: The numbers of enterprise allowance awards in each year since the scheme was introduced are set out in the following table. The information required to answer points (a), (b), (c) and (d) is not available.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total sum budgeted by her Department for enterprise allowance in the current financial year; what has been the total cost of the enterprise allowance programme in each year since its introduction; and in each instance, what proportion of the total cost has been accounted for by administrative expenses.

Mr. McLoughlin: The total sum budgeted for enterprise allowance in the current financial year is £107·6 million. The information on the total cost of the enterprise allowance in each year since its introduction is set out in the table. Information on the total cost accounted for by administrative expenses is not available.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretry of State for Employment how many registered disabled people have been working; and what proportion they are of the total work force in (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector for each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available in the form requested.

However, tables showing the number and percentage of registered disabled people employed by a wide range of individual public sector employers are published in the Employment Gazette. The most recent complete set of figures is in the 1991 gazette and relates to June 1990. A partial set of figures, relating to June 1991 is in the February 1992 gazette.

The percentage of registered disabled people employed, on average, by employers whose figures are in the gazette, together with estimated comparisons for the private sector, for the years 1986 to 1990, are set out in the table. The data relate to employers who have 20 or more employees. Later comparable information is not yet available.

EDUCATION

Adult Literacy and Basic Skills Unit

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the status of the adult literacy and basic skills unit; whether it has charitable status; how it is funded; and whether it publishes accounts.

Mr. Forman: The adult literacy and basic skills unit is a registered company limited by guarantee with charitable status. It is largely funded by grant from the Department for Education and the Welsh Office. The unit's accounts are published in its annual report.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when the adult literacy and basic skills unit was formed and by whom; and how many people work within the organisation (a) full or (b) part time.

Mr. Forman: The adult literacy and basic skills unit —ALBSU—was formed in 1980 by the Secretary of State for Education and Science and the Secretary of State for Wales as an agency of the National Institute of Adult Continuing Education—NIACE. In 1991 ALBSU became independent of NIACE and is now a limited company and a registered charity. ALBSU currently employs 21 full-time and no part-time staff.

Environmental Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to include environmental education as a part of teacher training courses.

Mr. Forth: All courses of initial teacher training are required to ensure that prospective teachers are able to incorporate in their teaching cross-circular dimensions and themes, including environmental education.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table showing, for each local education authority with an approved LMS scheme (a) the percentage of the aggregated schools budget that is distributed by the age-weighted pupil numbers and (b) the ratio of the relevant age-weightings expressed in six bands of pupil ages—for pupils aged under five years, pupils in each of the four key stages and sixth-form pupils—with pupils in key stage 2 representing 1 in each ratio.

Mr. Forth: Figures on pupil-led funding for 1991-92 are contained in the table. Figures for 1992-93 are not yet available, but I will write to the hon. Member when our analysis of the data received from local education authorities is complete. The information on each authority's age-weightings could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Footnotes to table showing the extent of pupil-led funding.

[1] The LEAs are ranked according to how much the funds delegated to schools have been allocated on the basis of pupil numbers and ages, with those allocating a greater percentage of pupil-led funding at the top of the ranking order.

2. The aggregated schools budget (ASB) is that part of the potential schools budget which is delegated to the school level. The current requirement is that at least 75 per cent. of an LEA's ASB is based on pupil numbers and ages. From 1993 (1995 for inner London authorities) the minimum percentage will be raised to 80 per cent. The percentage of pupil-led funding in 1990-91 is given in brackets. Where a figure is not given in brackets, either the LMS scheme was not in operation last year or the relevant information was not contained in the LEA's budget statement.

NB The percentages stated may differ from the percentages calculated by the individual LEAs because of the effects of rounding.

Schools Admissions Register

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what restrictions are placed upon the commercial or other uses that can be made of the names and addresses on the schools admissions register when a parent has obtained such information by legitimate means in connection with a petition or a ballot being organised for a school to seek grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: None.

Illiteracy

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether the numbers of functionally illiterate people in England and Wales are increasing or declining; and when such records started to be kept.

Mr. Forman: The Department's current estimate of the number of people in England and Wales who are functionally illiterate is based on a survey carried out some years ago by the adult literacy and basic skills unit. There is no evidence as to whether numbers are growing or declining. ALBSU is however currently undertaking a similar survey, the results of which are likely to be known within the next 12 months.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 20 May 1992, Official Report, columns 158-59, if he will publish a breakdown of the 5·5 million people who are functionally illiterate in England and Wales into groups according to age, area and ethnic origin.

Mr. Forman: The figure of 5·5 million functionally illiterate people in England and Wales is an estimate based on a survey carried out by the adult literacy and basic skills unit. The survey did not distinguish according to age, area and ethnic origin.

Environmental Studies

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will make it his policy to review the current position of environmental education and promote the teaching of environmental studies in association with social education as a compulsory subject at both primary and secondary levels;

(2) what efforts are being made by his Department to promote the teaching of the concept of sustainable development as part of the core curriculum.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend sees no reason to change the present arrangements for the teaching of environmental education and personal and social education as cross-curricular themes to all pupils through the compulsory core and foundation subjects and, where appropriate, additionally.

Provisions for the study of environmental geography and sustainable development are set out in the geography order and its associated documents which are issued to all schools.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the documents or projects produced by his Department to be used in schools to raise the awareness of pupils on environmental issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Environmental education is a cross-curricular theme taught to all pupils through the core and foundation subjects, the terms of which are set out in the statutory orders and associated documents issued by my Department. Additional guidance has been provided by the National Curriculum Council.

Toxic Shock Syndrome

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information is available on the tampon industry's schools education programme; and if information on toxic shock syndrome is incorporated into schools curricula.

Mr. Forth: Teaching about the use of sanitary protection would normally be covered within a school's programme of sex education. Under section 18(2) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, responsibility for determining an individual school's policy on the content and organisation of sex education rests with the school governing body.

Free School Meals

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of pupils receiving free school meals at (a) primary and (b) secondary schools for each year since 1981.

Mr. Forth: The readily available information for pupils in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England is as follows. Information for 1981 was not published, and no survey was undertaken in 1985. The discontinuity in the figures in 1988 reflects the introduction of a new provision in the Social Security Act 1986 which came into force in 1988. Before then, LEAs had discretionary powers to provide free school meals to whomsoever they wished. From 1988, LEAs must charge for meals provided to all pupils other than those in receipt of income support.

Year	Nursery' and Primary' Pupils	Secondary Pupils
1982	533,140	398,190
1983	597,545	442,874
1984	651,647	461,954
1986	685,018	425,634
1987	682,804	386,383
1988	491,000	249,000
1989	515,395	235,270
1990	519,228	222,929
1991	562,993	235,107

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what extra grant is made available for small schools under grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: All grant-maintained schools, irrespective of size, are eligible for transitional grants, special purpose grants and capital grants over and above their annual maintenance grant. The special purpose grant for staff and curriculum development and the capital formula grant each includes a minimum allocation, which is to the benefit of small schools. In addition, the annual maintenance grant will include a small school allowance to the extent that this is the case under the local management of schools scheme of the grant-maintained school's former local education authority.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what inspections are being made into the operations of grant-maintained schools; and whether his Department will be publishing a report on the findings.

Mr. Forth: The arrangements for inspection under the Education (Schools) Act 1992 will ensure that we have detailed inspection reports on a quarter of all schools, including GM schools, each year. In the meantime, Her Majesty's inspectorate has included GM schools, along with other maintained schools, in its regular programme of visits. To date, these visits do not yet provide the sort of evidence base that would be expected for a report aimed at fulfilling that part of HMI's remit which is to make known more widely good practice and promising developments, and draw attention to weaknesses requiring attention.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what geographical and age range criteria he employs to determine which combinations of schools will be entitled to consideration when considering applications from clusters of schools for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: At present, schools must apply individually to my right hon. Friend for grant-maintained status following a successful parental ballot. Each application is treated strictly on its merits. My right hon. Friend is considering arrangements to permit schools to apply for grant-maintained status in groups.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if it is his intention to introduce legislation to turn all local education authority schools, other than nursery and special schools, into grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: It is already possible for any local education authority county or voluntary school to apply to my right hon. Friend for grant-maintained status after a successful parental ballot. This arrangement is working well and there are no plans to change it.

As at 4 June, 260 schools have already been approved for grant-maintained status. In time I expect grant-maintained status to become the natural organisational model, particularly for secondary schools.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidelines are issued by his Department for the operation of petitions and ballots which seek to determine whether a school should apply for grant-maintained status; what are the criteria for determining who is eligible to petition and to vote; and what arrangements are made to cross-check a person's entitlement to petition or vote with entries in local government and parliamentary electoral registers.

Mr. Forth: The Department produces a booklet entitled "How to Become a Grant-Maintained School" which gives guidance for the operation of petitions and ballots in connection with seeking to achieve grant-maintained status. It is the duty of the governing body to take reasonable steps to determine who is eligible to vote by virtue of their being a parent of a registered pupil at the school.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has for the long-term funding of grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: We are keeping the matter under review as the number of grant-maintained schools increases.

Student Finance

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what action the Government have taken to measure the effects of the student loans scheme on participation by social class or gender;

(2) when he will undertake a survey of students' income and expenditure.

Mr. Forman: The Government and the Student Loans Company are committed to monitoring student loans. We have just issued a statistical bulletin which analyses take-up during academic year 1990-91 by gender, age and region. The Student Loans Company's first annual report was published on 21 October last year and placed in the Library. A second will be published this autumn. We shall commission further surveys of students' income and expenditure as and when appropriate.

Asthma

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his Department's estimate of the number of days lost from school due to asthma amongst the under-10 age group; and what were the comparable figures for five and 10 years ago.

Mr. Forth: The information is not collected centrally.

School Bussing

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to revise the legislation relating to school bussing in the Education Act 1944 to take account of the changes in the law concerning parental choice of schools.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to change the law on home to school transport, which gives local education authorities the duty to arrange necessary transport and an unrestricted power to offer further help in the light of local circumstances.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he has any changes to announce to cash limits on votes within his responsibility for 1992-93.

Mr. Patten [pursuant to his reply, 4 June, 1992, c. 618-19]: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the running cost limit of class XI vote 4 will be reduced by £1,530,000 from £105,060,000 to £103,530,000.

This reduction results from the decision to transfer responsibility for sport to the Department of National Heritage, and responsibility for science to the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service.

SCOTLAND

Argyll and Clyde Health Board

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what annual salaries, allowances or honoraria are paid to the chairman and each member of Argyll and Clyde health board; if any increases or decreases in these are planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The chairman of Argyll and Clyde health board currently receives remuneration of £17,700 per annum and non-executive members receive £5,000. In addition, the chairman and members are entitled to claim travelling and subsistence allowances at rates set for members of public bodies. No immediate changes in remuneration and allowances are currently planned, but the position is being kept under review.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what undertakings firms have to give about their continued presence in an enterprise zone before receiving assistance from Scottish Enterprise or local enterprise companies.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Such matters are dealt with on a case-by-case basis, but as a general rule, before any company is considered for an enterprise zone site owned by Scottish Enterprise or a local enterprise company it would have to demonstrate genuine medium-term business prospects. If an EZ site is sold to a company, the conditions of sale would probably include a first option buy-back clause operative for the lifetime of the zone. Any assistance granted to the company would relate to employment levels and any serious reduction in employment would trigger a clawback arrangement.

Renfrewshire Enterprise

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of Renfrewshire Enterprise; and what matters he hopes to discuss.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Communications between my right hon. Friend and me and the local enterprise companies take place chiefly through Scottish Enterprise; and we have frequent discussions with the chairman and board members of Scottish Enterprise.

I myself had a very useful and constructive meeting with the chairman of Renfrewshire Enterprise and his colleagues on 14 October last year at which a wide range of topics relating to training and industrial development were discussed; and I hope to meet representatives of Renfrewshire Enterprise again in the near future.

Tattoos

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health authority in Scotland the number of patients waiting for operations; and of those how many are waiting for the removal of tattoos.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The total number of patients waiting for hospital treatment at 30 September 1991 is shown in the table:

Health board	In-patient treatment	Day case treatment

Funerals

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the Institute of Burial and Cremation Administration to discuss the operation of cemeteries, crematoria and funeral undertakings in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present for such a meeting.

Health Service

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the average number of national health service beds available in the Argyll and Clyde health board area in each year since 1982 and the average number of those described as acute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is shown in the table.

Forests (Equestrian Access)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will require the Forestry Commission to guarantee equestrian access as of right in the titles of any forests disposed of by the commission; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: No. The sale of Forestry Commission woodlands does not affect horse riding on public rights of way which are bridleways. Other equestrian access to Forestry Commission woodlands is only allowed by express permission of the commission. In such cases, permission to ride in Forestry Commission woodlands after sale will be a matter for agreement with the new owners.

Local Development Companies

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give details of the number and cost of the external consultancy studies on local development companies under Scottish Enterprise;

(2) if he intends to publish the findings of the external consultancy studies on local development companies under Scottish Enterprise.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Decisions on whether to commission external consultancy studies and whether to publish the findings of any such studies are matters for Scottish Enterprise. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Child Care, Fife

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the report on the inquiry into child care in Fife was completed; if he will publish the report; what were the total costs of the inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I understand that the report of the inquiry into the child care policies in Fife region is likely to be completed within the next few days. So far as publication of the report and the costs of the inquiry are concerned I refer the hon. Member to my replies of 19 May, at columns 123-24.

HIV

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many payments have been made to non-haemophiliacs infected with HIV as a result of NHS blood/tissue transfers, or to families of the deceased, following the announcement by his Department on 17 February that special provisions would be made.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 21 May 1992]: Payment of five claims received under the scheme has been made. A further three claims are in the process of being validated and payment will be made as soon as possible.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent on advertising electoral registration in Scotland in 1989, 1990 and 1991; how much will be spent in the current year; and of this sum how much is spent on (a) television, (b) newspaper, (c) billboard and (d) other advertising.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 June 1992]: Annual publicity expenditure on electoral registration in Scotland in recent years is as follows:

1989-90	30,648·48
1990-91	39,192·05
1991-92	41,640·50
1992-93	[1]48,000·00

The expenditure for 1992-93 will cover newspaper advertisements along with an associated poster display in council and other public offices, libraries etcetera.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the population in each parliamentary constituency; and what is the number of (a) electors on each constituency register and (b) those registered on the community charge register within the area of each constituency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 June 1992]: The information requested by the hon. Member is set out in the table for the latest available population estimates and electoral registrations by parliamentary constituency. No information is available centrally about the number of persons within parliamentary constituency areas who are on the community charge register.

Plantable Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each financial year since April 1980 (a) the amount of plantations and plantable land in hectares that has been sold by the Forestry Commission, (b) the proceeds from the sale and (c) the book value of the sale; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 3 June 1992]: The information is available in the form requested only from 1986, as follows:

1986	8,314	9,592	7,845
1987	6,186	8,308	6,120
1988	6,387	6,839	6,406
1989	4,328	4,993	6,967
1990	5,559	6,972	7,992
1991	4,770	7,073	11,509

The receipts are the actual prices received from the sale of plantations and plantable land, and reflect the state of the market at the time of sale. The book value is calculated from the expected future value of the wood production at the time of felling, discounted at the commission's target rate of return of 3 per cent.

Postgraduate Grants

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to review the Scottish Education Department grants regime with regard to students wishing to pursue postgraduate qualifications.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 June 1992]: The operation of the postgraduate students' allowance scheme, which provides assistance to students undertaking vocational postgraduate courses, is reviewed at regular intervals in common with other schemes of student support.

Fisheries Decommissioning

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment has been made of the employment consequences of the introduction of the proposed decommissioning package.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 4 June 1992]: The detailed arrangements for the proposed decommissioning scheme are currently the subject of consultation with the industry. The impact of the scheme will also depend on the circumstances of the particular vessels which take up the scheme, but in the long term employment in fishing and related industries will best be protected by our proposals to reduce fishing pressure and hence conserve fish stocks.

Fishermen (Retraining)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he proposes any measures to ensure proper access to training and retraining facilities for those choosing to leave the fishing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 4 June 1992]: At present Scottish Enterprise and several of its enterprise companies are actively engaged with representatives of the fishing industry, its companies and local authorities to plan for the future needs of fishermen. The implications of reduced fishing activities in fisheries dependent areas are currently being addressed within the European Community, both as part of the common fisheries policy mid-term review and as part of the reform structural funds. Work is currently being undertaken by the European Commmission to identify dependent areas and possible measures to retrain and reorientate fishermen leaving the industry into other economic activities. The Government will give careful consideration to the results which emerge from these studies.

EC Cohesion Fund

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment his Department has made of the possible advantages to Scotland of the EC cohesion fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 4 June 1992]: No such assessment has been made because no assistance will be available to Scotland through the cohesion fund. It will assist only member states whose per capita GNP is less than 90 per cent. of the Community average—Portugal, Spain, Greece and the Republic of Ireland—provided they meet certain macro-economic policy conditions.

Creel Fisheries

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department has considered the report jointly commissioned by Highland regional council and Highlands and Islands Enterprise into the prospect for creel fisheries in north of Scotland waters; and if he will make a statement on the implications of the reports recommendations for his Department.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 4 June 1992]: The report was prepared to assist Highland regional council and Highlands and Islands Enterprise in developing their own strategies relating to the industry in their region.

Community Charge

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the amount of community charge in each district and islands area in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 which is attributable to the costs of covering non-payment in previous years.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 4 June 1992]: This information is not collected centrally.

Forestry

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to prevent the straight-up ploughing for forestry at Forest farm, Glen Croick, Sutherland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 5 June 1992.]: The Forestry Commission has approved an application for grant aid to plant about 2,000 hectares of native pinewood at Croick. It is a condition of this approval that any poughing is carried out in accordance with the commission's forests and water guidelines. Straight-up ploughing is generally acceptable under these guidelines. However, a small, steeply sloping area at Croick has been ploughed contrary to the approved plan, and the owners have agreed to carry out remedial action.

Education

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in the current revenue support grant provision for Strathclyde regional council, what proportion is intended for the purpose of education; and what proportion of that sum is considered necessary to meet nursery education requirements.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 5 June 1992]: Local authority current expenditure is supported by aggregate external finance—AEF—which consists of non-domestic rate income—NDRI—revenue support grant—RSG—and specific grants. The NDRI and RSG components are not hypothecated to particular services.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Comber Bypass

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the land has been acquired for phases 2 and 3 of the Comber bypass; and if he will make a statement about progress with the design work for this bypass.

Mr. Atkins: Land acquisition and design work for phase 2 is well advanced. No work has commenced on phase 3 which currently falls outside the five-year major works programme.

Tattoos

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each health authority in Northern Ireland the number of patients waiting for operations; and of those how many are waiting for the removal of tattoos.

Mr. Hanley: Information is not collected centrally on the numbers waiting for operations. The numbers of patients waiting for in-patient admission to the relevant surgical specialties in hospitals managed by each of the health and social service boards as at 31 March 1992 are as follows:

Board	All surgical specialties	Plastic surgery

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to ensure that all lists of candidates for public appointments in Northern Ireland contain equal numbers of men and women.

Mr. Mates: All appointments to public bodies are made on merit and the particular expertise which each individual brings to the post. I will continue to ensure that sufficient numbers of women's names appear on the list of candidates submitted for consideration to increase substantially the representation of women on all public bodies in Northern Ireland.

New Zealand Flatworm

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at how many places in Northern Ireland the New Zealand flatworm has been identified; what effect its presence has had on native earthworm populations; what research he has undertaken as to the consequences for soil fertility as a result of infestation by the flatworm; whether any control measures have been implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The New Zealand flatworm has now been identified at just over 300 sites, the majority of which are domestic gardens. It has occasionally been associated with reductions in earthworm numbers. The diversity of earthworm species may also be reduced by this flatworm.

The importance of earthworms to soil fertility is well established and the impact of the flatworm on earthworm populations in Northern Ireland is being studied by scientists from the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland.

There are no control measures currently available.

Tobacco

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to extend the provisions of the Children and Young Persons (Protection from Tobacco) Act 1991 to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Children and Young Persons (Protection from Tobacco) (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 will come into operation on 1 July 1992.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Household Incomes

12. Mr. Michael Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the results of the households below average income analysis for 1989 is likely to be available and published.

Mr. Burt: As we announced on 12 December 1991, we expect the next edition of "Households Below Average Income" to be ready for publication in July. The date will be announced in due course in the Central Statistical Office monthly bulletin.

Maxwell Pensions

13. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the current position of the current pensioners, deferred pensioners and contributories of the Maxwell pension funds.

18. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the latest Government position towards pensions in the Maxwell-owned companies.

Mr. Lilley: I understand that all Maxwell pensioners received their full payments for May apart from 240 members of the Headington pension plan. I am well aware that the uncertainty facing many Maxwell pensioners must be causing them considerable anxiety and distress, and I share the deep concern of the House about this. I shall be making a statement shortly.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to guarantee payments to pensioners presently receiving payments from the Maxwell pension funds.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 13 May at column 140.

Benefits (Means Testing)

14. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to carry out a review of the scope for means testing of all universal benefits.

Mr. Lilley: On a number of occasions we have made clear our commitment to child benefit and retirement pension. We shall continue to monitor the effectiveness of the social security system, as we have done since introducing the major reforms of 1988.

Disabled People (Benefits)

16. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has had on the levels of benefit payable to people with disabilities.

Mr. Scott: We receive a large volume of correspondence on disability benefits some of which touches on the rate of benefit payable. Under this Government, spending on benefits for disabled people has risen by 173 per cent. in real terms, a record of which we are rightly proud.

Occupational Pensions

17. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners currently have an occupational pension; and what was the equivalent figure in 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: I am pleased to tell my hon. Friend that 57 per cent. of all pensioners, and 69 per cent. of those who had recently retired, were receiving income from occupational pensions in 1988. The equivalent proportions in 1979 were 44 and 54 per cent. respectively.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many United Kingdom pensioners also have an occupational pension.

Youth Training

21. Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will restore income support to 16 to 17-year-olds who cannot find a youth training place.

Mr. Burt: The Government's policy of providing a guarantee of a suitable youth training place to all young people who want one, instead of their depending on social security benefits, is the most effective way of encouraging young people to make the most of their opportunities. However, income support is available to those vulnerable groups of young people who are unable to participate in YT and to those seeking a YT place who would otherwise be at risk of severe hardship. We have no plans to restore general entitlement to income support, but we are monitoring closely the operation of these rules with a view to streamlining their administration where possible.

Retirement Age

22. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a further statement about the age of retirement.

Miss Widdecombe: Our discussion paper, published on 18 December 1991, has been well received and there have already been many considered responses from both individuals and organisations. The discussion period ends on 30 June and we intend to bring forward detailed proposals in the light of comments received.

Centenarians

23. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women reached their 100th birthday in the past year.

Miss Widdecombe: I am pleased to tell my hon. Friend that in the past year 263 men and 2,090 women celebrated their 100th birthdays.

Social Security Expenditure

24. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total of Government spending on social security as a percentage of gross domestic product.

26. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further proposals he has for review of the benefits system.

27. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what studies he has made of the impact of the withdrawal of the standard rights to benefit on the health and well-being of unemployed 16 and 17-year-olds (a) who leave home and (b) who do not leave home.

Mr. Burt: This Department has not commissioned research on this specific topic. However, I welcome and study carefully reports on young people published by voluntary organisations and other groups.

Pension Payments

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effect on the availability of cash at post offices of the maximum limit of three months' pension which can be collected at one time; and if he will review this limit.

Mr. Burt: Arrangements for benefit payment and liaison with the Post Office Counters Ltd. are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State earlier today.

Family Credit

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take action to speed up the processing of family credit claims; and if sufficient resources are available to meet current levels of claims.

Mr. Burt: The administration of family credit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Departmental Press Release

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the purpose and cost to public funds of his Department's press release dated 11 May consisting of a curriculum vitae of the Minister of State for Social Secuirty and Disabled People; and how many inquiries were received in answer to it.

Mr. Burt: In common with other Government Departments' practice, the press release of updated biographical details was for information only. The cost for production and distribution was under £100. To date there have been no inquiries.

Miss Widdecombe: We have received a number of representations concerning the new 1 per cent. additional rebate which we intend to introduce from April 1993 for appropriate personal pension holders age 30 and over.

We shall continue to build upon the reforms introduced in 1988 with the aim of further modernising and improving our social security system.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to announce his decision on the implementation of byelaws regarding the protection of salmon and sea-trout in the estuaries of (a) Meirionnydd and (b) north Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Following receipt of these proposed byelaws in 1991, consideration by the Department and discussions with the promoters have identified the need for some modifications. The Welsh Office has yet to receive final versions from the promoters.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The accident involved three cars and occurred on a double bend in the late afternoon during wet weather. Two of the occupants were killed, four seriously injured and two slightly injured. An investigation will be carried out when full details are available.

Ancient Woodland

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to double the planting of native broadleaf species in those counties which have lost one third of their ancient woodland since 1930.

Mr. David Hunt: The area of broadleaves planted in Wales has more than trebled over the last decade. A total of 450 hectares of broadleaves have, on average, been planted each year during the last five years, as compared with an average of 120 hectares during the previous seven years. Nearly all the planting was carried out with native species.

The Government's policy is that there should be a continuing expansion of the area of native woodland in Wales.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether sites of special scientific interest which may include ancient woodland will, in future, be protected from any depradation by agriculture, quarrying or any other activity.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Sites of special scientific interest are already protected under the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The joint Welsh Office/Department of the Environment circular No. 1/92 "Planning Controls over Sites of Special Scientific Interest", which took effect from 2 January 1992, announced further planning safeguards for these areas.

School Governors

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will detail the action he has taken or proposes to take to recruit school governors in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The year 1992 marks the end of the first four-year term for governors who were appointed in the wake of the Education Reform Act. Some 13,000 school governorships in Wales come up for renewal later this year. While I hope that many existing governors will wish to put their names forward for a further four-year term, I anticipate that there will be many opportunities for others to become governors for the first time.

We have, therefore, produced bilingual leaflets and posters together with a Welsh language video which local authorities and schools will be using as part of their efforts to encourage parents and others to become school governors. Local education authorities and schools are also working hard to ensure that all vacancies are filled.

We all have an interest in ensuring that our children have a good education—the future is in their hands. I hope that as many people as possible will take the opportunity that presents itself this year to put their name forward and become involved in the running of their local school. It is a very rewarding job.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusnik Leib Levin and his family, of Ust Kamenogorsk.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We made several representations on behalf of Leib Levin and his family; we understand that he has now received permission to leave Kazakhstan.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the forthcoming United Nations world conference on human rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom is closely involved with EC and other like-minded countries in the preparatory process leading to the world conference on human rights, due to be held in Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993. Since being presented to Australia in January 1988 the ship has carried more than 2,000 young Australians on 10-day sail training voyages, and 1,650 disabled young people on shorter trips. It has also called at numerous ports around Australia and been visited by approximately 20,000 members of the public each year. In addition, the vessel undertakes flagship duties such as going to Auckland for the Commonwealth games in 1990 and representing Australia in the present grand regatta Columbus.

Dependent Territories (Investments)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out his policy and advice to Ministers of Finance in the United Kingdom's dependent territories on (a) the tendering for and appointment of investment advisers and (b) the tendering for and appointment of investment performance monitors.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Responsibility for the tendering for an appointment of investment advisers and investment performance monitors for the United Kingdom's dependent territories rests with the Minister of Finance, or equivalent official, of each territory. Dependent territories wishing to recruit such advisers will do so on the basis of local legislation and regulations.

Newspaper Distribution

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the application of protocol 17 of the Maastricht treaty as it applies to freedom of distribution of United Kingdom newspapers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The protocol to which the right hon. Member refers is, of course, not yet in force. On 2 May, European Community Foreign Ministers agreed a legal interpretation and solemn declaration stating that it was not their intention that the protocol should limit the freedom to travel and the right to information about services legally available in other member states, as I told my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 13 May. I understand that the Government of the Irish Republic intend to hold a referendum later this year on an amendment to their constitution to confirm this.

Iran

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy with regard to the export of military equipment to Iran.

Mr. Douglas-Hogg: The guidelines relating to all deliveries of defence equipment to Iran were set by the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 29 October 1985. They remain strictly enforced.

Tamil Refugees

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indian Government concerning the enforced repatriation of Tamil refugees from Tamil Nadu to Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. The Indian Government temporarily suspended repatriation of Tamil refugees from Tamil Nadu to Sri Lanka on 15 May.

Ceremonial Dress

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 110, if he will itemise the expenditure on ceremonial dress for 1991-92.

Mr. Goodlad: Ceremonial dress for HM representatives cost as follows:

Bangladesh	2,735
Holy See	3,193
Kathmandu	615
Luxembourg	3,440
Stockholm	2,613
British Virgin Islands	2,725
Kuala Lumpur	756

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what use is to be made of the ceremonial dress normally reserved for the Governor of Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: As I said in reply to the hon. Member's question on 13 May, Mr. Patten does not propose to wear ceremonial dress. None has therefore been made for him.

HEALTH

Child Protection Units

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the staffing numbers for each local authority child protection unit in England and Wales; and what they were in 1979.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held currently.

Organ Transplants

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will bring forward proposals to amend the Human Organ Transplants Act 1989 further to provide for the circumstances in which an organ may be retrieved from a dead person for the purposes of transplant, to require the anonymity of the donor and the recipient, to define death for the purposes of that Act of 1989 as the total and irreversible loss of brain function and for connected purposes.

Mr. Sackville: No. Conditions for the removal of human organs from dead people for transplantation are provided in the Human Tissue Act 1961. The anonymity of the donor and recipient is covered by the common law principle of patient confidentiality which applies to all medical information. The determination of death is a matter for the clinical judgment of doctors. Brain stem death criteria have been accepted by the medical profession as conclusive evidence of death and are already applied for the purposes of organ retrieval.

Dental Treatment

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effect on the availability of national health service dental care in Staffordshire of his Department's proposals to cut fees to national health service dental practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have made fair and reasonable proposals on dentists' remuneration which are being considered by the dental rates study group. These proposals would lead to the average dentist receiving in 1992-93 not just the 8·5 per cent. increase in pay recommended by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration—and accepted in full by the Government—but some £5,000 in the full year in addition. We see no reason why such an offer should adversely affect the availability of the national health service dental care in Staffordshire, or elsewhere.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy with regard to the proposals in the EC draft directive on the hygiene of foodstuffs; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the current EC legislation which governs the safety of mail order foods by means of a voluntary code of guidance.

Mr. Sackville: The Government welcome the EC Commission's proposal for a directive on the hygiene of foodstuffs as an important step in securing harmonised food hygiene standards throughout the Community. There is no current EC legislation dealing specifically with the safety of mail order foods.

Chernobyl

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has of the effect on deaths of children from cancer of the thyroid caused by contamination of the milk supply following the Chernobyl explosion.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for the United Kingdom show that no children died from cancer of the thyroid in respect of the period 1986-90. The Department is not aware of any evidence which demonstrates that any medical effects have occurred in the United Kingdom as a result of radiation exposures from the Chernobyl accident.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what methods she is using to project the numbers of persons likely to require residential or nursing home care after April 1993; and what conclusions she has reached.

Mr. Yeo: We currently estimate that about 110,000 people annually would have permanently entered independent residential care or nursing homes if the system of higher levels of income support had continued. This figure has regard to the growth in numbers under the present system and turnover rates estimated from the results of recent surveys about the characteristics of people living in residential care and nursing homes, including length of stay. We shall keep this estimate under review as further information becomes available. All such estimates have a margin of error. The actual number of people admitted to residential care and nursing homes under local authority auspices from April 1993 will depend on an assessment by authorities of their care needs.

South Birmingham Health Authority

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide details of the deficit reported by South Birmingham health authority for the last financial year.

Mr. Sackville: The deficit for South Birmingham in 1991-92 is currently estimated to be approximately £10·5 million. Of this, £4 million relates to excess creditors carried forward from 1990-91 and the remaining £6·5 million to overspending in 1991-92.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much the West Midlands regional health authority agreed to increase South Birmingham health authority's allocation in the last financial year; and what understandings were reached on compensating reductions for later years.

Mr. Sackville: South Birmingham health authority received an additional £15 million in the 1991-92 financial year, which was the best estimate, at that time, of the district's financial deficit. The additional funding was provided on the understanding that there would be a complete investigation into the cause and scale of the deficit. The district has agreed to take action to restore an income and expenditure balance. Any further actions which may be needed, must await the results of the investigation and subsequent discussions between the regional health authority and South Birmingham health authority.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of the KPMG Peat Marwick report on South Birmingham health authority.

Mr. Sackville: KPMG Peat Marwick has not yet completed its report.

Asthma

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to her reply on 2 June, Official Report, column 465, what information is held by her Department on the incidence of asthma among children; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Figures on the incidence of asthma amongst children are not held centrally, but it is estimated that upwards of 700,000 children and adolescents under the age of 16 in the United Kingdom are affected by the condition.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department holds on the possible links between child asthma and vehicle pollution due to exhaust emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Asthma is an ill-understood disease. The role of air pollutants in affecting the interplay between genetic and environmental factors, such as exposure to vehicle emissions is unclear. Research is being carried out into factors contributing to the rise of asthma, but no clear conclusions have emerged.

The Advisory Group on the Medical Aspects of Air Pollution Episodes looked at the evidence linking ozone levels with asthma and concluded that the data were not persuasive. The group will soon examine other possible associations with asthma and other respiratory diseases.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were born in the United Kingdom in the last five years, for which records are available, to mothers aged 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18 years, respectively; how many and what percentage of those mothers of age 16 years and over were married to the father of the child at the time of birth; and what is her estimate of the number and proportion of babies born to mothers aged 14 to 16 years which are being cared for by grandparents or other relatives.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested relating to live births is as follows:

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has any proposals to further postpone the implementation of the community care reforms.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke), on 12 May at column 81.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish her estimates of the cost to local authorities of community care in 1993-94; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is being considered in the public expenditure survey. We are committed to resourcing community care fairly.

Dentists and General Practitioners

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the average net pay of (a) dentists and (b) general practitioners for each of the last five years; and what is the projected figure for 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body recommends to Government the target average net income for dentists and the intended average income for doctors.

The target average net income of general dental practitioners and the intended average income of general medical practitioners since 1987-88 are as follows:

	General dental practitioners £	General medical practitioners £
1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988	23,220	26,840

1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993	35,815	40,010

Electro-convulsive Therapy

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that ECT is never administered to anyone under 18 years of age.

Mr. Yeo: Treatment decisions are a matter for clinical judgment. Electro-convulsive therapy is rarely used for people under 18 years of age, but can be the appropriate treatment in certain circumstances.

Domestic Fires

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many men, women, children and pensioners died in fires in their homes during each of the last five years for which records are available, in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

The available information relates to deaths in fires attended by local authority fire brigades between 1986 and 1990 and is shown in the table.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is published in table 7 of the Home Office report, "Fire Statistics United Kingdom 1990", a copy of which is in the Library. Details of the cause of death come from fire brigade records of fires they attend, updated where possible by information from the death certificate.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the policy reasons for the provision of buoyage by the Royal Navy in the Solent.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Queen's harbour master provides and maintains navigation buoys in the Solent as required by schedule 1, regulation 1 of the Dockyard Port of Portsmouth Act 1978.

Cambodia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by (a) rank and (b) armed service the 35 British military observers who are joining the United Nations land operation in Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are providing a total of 38 military observers for the United Nations Transition Authority in Cambodia comprising, from the Army, seven lieutenant colonels, 15 majors and 10 captains; from the Royal Air Force, one wing commander, one squadron leader and three flight lieutenants; and from the Royal Marines, one captain.

NAAFI profits

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what method the use of NAAFI profits for sporting purposes within the armed forces is determined.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Units of the armed forces are paid a rebate, at rates agreed by the NAAFI council, on total sales at retail prices in junior ranks clubs. The rebate may be spent on improving the amenities of clubs or any purpose that collectively benefits service personnel, including sports. Within these guidelines, use of the rebate is at the discretion of unit commanders.

Low Flying

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been paid by his Department in compensation to individuals in terms of (a) personal injury both physical and mental and (b) for damage to property arising from low-flying aircraft in each of the last three financial years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Statistics regarding compensation for low flying aircraft activity are not available in the format requested. The following is a breakdown of overall expenditure for claims relating to low-flying aircraft activity:

1990-91	429,000
1991-92	441,000

RAF Brawdy

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific statement was made by his predecessor on the future of Flight B202 Squadron search and rescue at RAF Brawdy in the press conference held at the Welsh Office, Cathays park, Cardiff, on 24 January.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware that my right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) made any statement at the press conference on 24 January, concerning search and rescue at RAF Brawdy. Final decisions on the structure and basing of the military search and rescue force have yet to be taken. It is, therefore, too early to say what the implications will be for the provision of search and rescue at RAF Brawdy.

Thames House

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give further details of the works on Thames house, as shown in table 1 of class I, votes 1, 2, 4 and 5 of the supply estimates 1992-93—HC 273-I—showing which parts of his Department will be occupying the building; and which buildings currently in use will be thereby vacated.

Mr. Aitken [holding answer 2 June 1992]: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment stated in his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss) on 5 June, at column 667, Thames house is being refurbished principally for occupation by the Security Service. The Ministry of Defence has no plans to occupy the building.

Tuesday 9 June 1992

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Rudolf Hess

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General if he will now place in the Library a copy of the Jones report into the alleged irregularities surrounding the death of Rudolf Hess in Spandau gaol in August 1987.

The Attorney-General: No. The document which the hon. Member refers to as the Jones report is a report submitted by the Metropolitan police to the Director of Public Prosecutions setting out the result of a police investigation into an alleged criminal offence. Such reports are confidential.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Small Shops

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet OPEN, the small shops group.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am considering whether it may be mutually helpful to meet representatives of OPEN later this year.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will undertake to set out the Government's proposed reforms of the Shops Act 1950 before the end of 1992; and if he will make a statement.

(2) whether he has any plans to publish, in broad terms, the reforms he would favour in the Shops Act 1950; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We certainly hope to be able to fulfil before the end of this year our commitment to publishing proposals for reform of the Shops Act 1950 once the legal position is clear. Judgment by the European Court of Justice on the compatibility of the current law on Sunday trading in England and Wales with Community law is at present expected in the early autumn.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners and remand prisoners at Durham prison were transferred to the care of hospitals in each month of the last two years; how many of such prisoners required (a) physical restraint such as handcuffs and (b) constant supervision by local police; what recompense has been made by the prison authorities as a health care purchaser to the providing hospitals; and what is the scale of charges that forms the basis of recompense.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of prisoners at Durham prison transferred to hospitals in each month of the year 1991-92 is as follows. Figures are not available for the previous year.

1991-92	Number
April	9
May	6
June	10
July	6
August	9
September	9
October	14
November	8
December	6
January	6
February	8
March	6
Total	97

All such prisoners were handcuffed to staff on the journey to hospital except where the medical conditions precluded this. None of thse prisoners required constant supervision by the police. Where patient care is provided to prisoners in national health service facilities, the costs are a matter for the prisoner's district health authority of origin.

Intelligence Data

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will place the specification of the computer for the national criminal intelligence service in the Library;

(2) if he will describe each separate index of personal data stored on the computer for the national criminal intelligence service; how many items of data are stored under each index; what is the number of entries in each index; and how many accesses to each index are expected over the coming year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The computer system to support the national criminal intelligence service is still being developed and the functional specification has not yet been finalised.

Nuclear Weapons Convoys (Accidents)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement as to how senior fire officers are being currently trained to deal with an accident involving a nuclear weapons road convoy; and what future training is being considered.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Training for senior officers of fire brigades in contingency planning and co-ordination of the emergency services' action continues to be provided by the Ministry of Defence and at the Fire Service college, which supplements the training in brigades to deal with incidents involving radioactivity.

Attacks on Police

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to bring forward proposals to strengthen legislation to punish those who attack and injure policemen carrying out their duties.

Mr. Jack: No. The courts already have strong powers to deal with those who attack and injure police officers and the Court of Appeal has made it clear that they should use them. The results of a survey of sentences imposed in the last six months of 1991 for assaults on the police demonstrated that the courts recognise that such assaults are despicable and deserve to be punished severely. Immediate custody was imposed for a significantly higher proportion of the assaults on the police covered in the survey than for assaults on all victims in 1990.

Derek Bentley

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from Mr. David Yallop concerning a posthumous pardon to Derek Bentley: and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Jack: Mr. Yallop wrote on 14 August 1991 referring to his book "To Encourage The Others" on the case of Derek Bentley and requesting an independent, public inquiry into the case. He was told that the contents of his book would be taken into account and that once inquiries were completed, the Secretary of State would be in a position to decide whether any further action on his part was necessary.

Mr. Yallop wrote on 21 May inquiring when the outcome of our consideration of the case would be announced. He has been informed that, in addition to the contents of his book, careful consideration is being given to a great deal of other material, including a letter and dossier received on 1 June from solicitors acting for Miss Iris Bentley. He has been advised that an announcement will be made as soon as the Secretary of State is in a position to decide whether any action on his part is justified.

County Council Elections

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received requesting the postponement or cancellation of county council elections due to be held in Wales in May 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No such representations have been received by me. However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has been approached by both local authority associations in Wales. Decisions on this matter have not yet been made.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is considering instituting the necessary parliamentary action to postpone or cancel the county council elections due to be held in Wales in May 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No decisions have yet been taken in this matter.

Urban Crime Fund

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will increase the level of funding provided to the Northumbria police force for the urban crime fund initiative.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the original level of funding indicated to the Northumbria police force for the urban crime fund initiative; and what was the figure finally approved.

Mr. Charles Wardle: When the urban crime fund initiative was launched on 26 November, it was announced that the three police authorities to benefit would each be eligible for additional funding of up to £3·66 million.

At the request of the three police authorities concerned, it has been agreed that £3·9 million, £1·3 million for each authority, of the total of £11 million revenue provision may be used for capital projects. The total Exchequer contribution remains unchanged at £11 million.

Immigration Office, Glasgow

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Glasgow immigration office will be reopened.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Glasgow immigration public inquiry office will be reopened as soon as possible.

Immigration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to enable a more flexible transition from temporary immigration permission for the purpose of unpaid child minder for close relatives on compassionate grounds to working holiday visa and vice versa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A person who wishes to come to the United Kingdom for a short period to care for a sick or elderly relative may be admitted as a visitor under the Immigration Rules provided that the immigration officer is satisfied among other things that it will not constitute employment, paid or unpaid, and that the passenger is genuinely seeking entry for the period of the visit as stated. A person who has been admitted as a visitor may qualify to stay on in the United Kingdom as a working holidaymaker if he or she is a young Commonwealth citizen aged 17 to 27 inclusive and meets the other requirements of the rules relating to the working holidaymaker scheme, and vice versa.

Correspondence

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter from Stuart Bower sent to his Department on 10 February.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A reply to Mr. Bower's letter has now been sent by my officials. I apologise to Mr. Bower for the delay in replying.

International Fraud

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will raise with his counterparts in other European Community and OECD countries the case for binding international agreements to allow investigation of bank accounts in the course of inquiries into international financial fraud.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 June 1992]: We already have arrangements to allow our investigators to pursue financial inquiries overseas. The Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Act 1990 enables us to provide full mutual legal assistance to other countries, including evidence concerning bank accounts, and to obtain such assistance from overseas. In addition, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the director of the Serious Fraud Office have powers of their own to investigate international frauds. And we shall shortly be introducing new legislation to extend the jurisdiction of our courts in relation to fraud committed across national boundaries.

We accept, both in principle and in practice, that bank secrecy should be lifted to allow the investigation of criminal offences. We have argued at the international level, most recently through our membership of the financial action task force on money laundering, against the use of bank secrecy to inhibit action against international criminal activity including money laundering and financial fraud.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Guinness Trials

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, how much legal aid has been paid to the defendants in the Guinness trials.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To date, over £1·3 million has been paid out of legal aid towards the Crown court costs of the defence in the Guinness trials. However, not all of the expected claims for costs from legal aid or central funds have yet been received by the court and the final amount is yet to be determined.

Legal Aid

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if a defendant has disposed of the proceeds of the sale of his home, how this affects his eligibility for legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The legal aid regulations provide that if it appears that an applicant for legal aid has deprived himself of or converted any resources in order to reduce the amount of his disposable capital, whether to reduce his liability to pay a contribution towards legal aid or otherwise, these resources shall be treated as part of his resources. Consequently, the applicant may be found to be ineligible for legal aid on financial grounds or any contribution to be paid will be based on the total resources he is deemed to have.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Banks (Audits)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any proposals for legislation under which all banks operating in the United Kingdom would be required to have (a) independent audit committees and (b) internal audit departments.

Mr. Nelson: The Bank of England's "Banking Act Report 1987-88", laid before the House on 18 May 1988, and the bank's "Statement of Principles" make it clear that the bank is committed to United Kingdom-based banking groups having independent audit committees where this is feasible. The bank also reviews the value of internal audit arrangements when assessing a bank's control and management systems.

Council Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the domestic valuations submitted by estate agents for the new council tax have been rejected by the Inland Revenue Valuation Office.

Mr. Dorrell: Private contractors are required to value band domestic properties issued in batches and, as at 29 May 1992, 6·3 per cent. of all batches returned to the Valuation Office agency had been rejected.

Passenger Transport (VAT)

Mr. Snape: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he intends to maintain the zero-rating of value added tax on passenger transport after 1997.

Sir John Cope: The Government have maintained, during the single market negotiations, our right to retain the coverage of our current zero rates including domestic passenger transport. The present agreement reached by Finance Ministers covers the period until 1997 without prejudice to what happens thereafter.

Advance Corporation Tax

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will issue a statement on the recoverability of advance corporation tax; how many companies have sought clearance before the payment of a group dividend with advance corporation tax attaching; how many are awaiting clearance; and what is the average waiting time for clearance.

Mr. Dorrell: Advance corporation tax—ACT—paid by a company in respect of a dividend or other qualifying distribution made in an accounting period may, up to a limit, be set against the company's liability to corporation tax for the accounting period. Where a company has paid more ACT than it can set off in an accounting period, it may carry back the surplus to set against its liability to corporation tax in the previous six years, which may give rise to a repayment of corporation tax for those years. Surplus ACT may also be carried forward indefinitely against future liability to corporation tax.

Special rules exist to counteract artificial tax advantages, including payment of a tax credit, or non-paymnent of ACT attaching to a dividend, when certain transactions in securities are involved. Companies can seek a clearance from the Inland Revenue that these rules do not apply. In the year to 31 March 1992, the Inland Revenue received about 3,500 such applications, of which less than 10 per cent. involved dividends paid within a group of companies. The average number of all cases awaiting clearance at any time in the six months to 31 March 1992 was 157, most of which did not involve dividends. All cases are processed within 30 days.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the reasons for treating the recovery of advance corporation tax by subsidiaries of group companies differently from the treatment of group companies as one taxpayer.

Mr. Dorrell: Companies paying dividends within a group may elect not to pay advance corporation tax on them. Where, however, a parent company pays a dividend, it must account for ACT. The parent may either set that ACT against its own liability to corporation tax, or may surrender it to a subsidiary, to be set off against the subsidiary's liability. This may lead to a repayment of corporation tax. Companies within groups may also be entitled to a credit for ACT suffered on the dividend income they receive.

Within a group, these provisions enable ACT to be paid only by the parent company and for that ACT to be set off against corporation tax within the group.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will increase the interest paid to premium bond holders over the next three years.

Mr. Nelson: The general level of interest rates has fallen substantially over the last 18 months. Against that background, I have no plans to increase the rate of interest used for the premium bond prize fund.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those business organisations he has consulted about the new aggregate sales listings for VAT and indicate their concerns.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise consulted businesses very widely. A list is currently being prepared and I shall write to my hon. Friend when it is complete.

The concerns expressed related to compliance costs and burdens on businesses, and the potential for abuse of commercially sensitive information. These were taken fully into account in EC negotiations, where some significant simplifications were achieved; and in the measures to implement these arrangements in the United Kingdom.

Intelligence Data

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the 22 Departments and non-departmental agencies that use the Government data network interchange personal data between themselves via the GDN; and how many of these interchanges are a consequence of using the GDN.

Mr. Nelson: Sixteen arrangements for interdepartmental transfer of personal data have been authorised. All are exchanges of staff pay and personnel information between Chessington computer centre and customer departments and use GDN as a means of meeting established requirements. Twenty-nine departments or non-departmental bodies now have access agreements with Racal Data Networks Limited to use GDN.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what publicity he is arranging on the effect of the Cheques Act 1992 (a) generally, (b) in cattle auctions, (c) in furniture and art auctions and (d) in motor trade auctions.

Mr. Nelson: A press release explaining the effects of the Cheques Act 1992 will be issued on 16 June when the Act comes into effect three months after Royal Assent was given.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and the Crown Estate, in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Treasury has no such responsibilities or duties.

Where the Crown Estate is the owner of the sea-bed or foreshore in inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land, it fulfils its responsibilities and duties set out in the Crown Estate Act 1961. It also has certain regulatory functions in respect of marine aggregate extraction and fish farming.

BCCI

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government have yet received from Lord Justice Bingham a copy of or extracts from his report on BCCI.

Mr. Nelson: Lord Justice Bingham has not yet completed his report into the inquiry. Her Majesty's Treasury has received from the inquiry, in accordance with its stated procedures, draft factual passages which are relevant to the responsibilities of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Debtor Countries

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to set up a fund to retire debts owed to commercial banks by lower income countries.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Mr. Lennox-Boyd) on 15 May, at column 223.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: My Department has a data protection co-ordinator responsible for ensuring compliance with the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1984. That officer maintains appropriate contact with the office of the Data Protection Registrar in all matters relating to the Act.

Mersey Tunnel

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax was rebated last year to self-employed people claiming against their use of the Mersey tunnel; and what plans there are to extend rebates to all people in employment.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that this information is not available.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much to date has been paid by Peter Clowes and Pamela Clowes on account of damages payable to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: A court order for interim payment of damages of £6 million was made on 13 April 1992 against Mr. and Mrs. Clowes. Enforcement has been stayed pending any appeal.

Carbon Tax

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of a carbon tax upon employment prospects.

Sir John Cope: The impact of a carbon tax on employment prospects is highly uncertain and would depend on a range of factors. These include the precise nature of the tax and the use made of the additional revenues. However the net impact may well be small, with job losses in some energy-intensive industries offset by gains in other industries which use less energy.

Valuation Office

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what targets will be set for the Valuation Office executive agency for the year 1992-93.

Mr. Nelson: I have set the following key targets for the agency in 1992-93.

Operational Targets

Non-domestic rates: to clear 302,000 appeals against the 1990 List of rating valuations and to deal with 222,000 reassessment cases arising because properties have undergone physical changes.

Council Tax: to complete the valuation banding of domestic properties. The Agency will undertake 4·3 million valuations directly and supervise private sector contractors in the valuation of a further 4·8 million properties.

Direct Taxes: to undertake 120,000 valuation cases for the Inland Revenue concerning Inheritance and Capital Gains Taxes and Stamp Duty.

Other: to undertake 135,000 property and land valuations for other Government Departments, public bodies and local authorities.

Financial Performance and Cost Efficiency to limit the Agency's net expenditure to its Main Estimates figure of £1·365 million; to achieve efficiency savings of approximately 2·5 per cent. on its gross expenditure; and to rationalise the number of its local offices from 121 to 113.

Citizens' Charter

to reply to 90 per cent. of all correspondence within 28 days of receipt; to publish a supplement to the Taxpayers' Charter to cover all Valuation Office work; and by June 1992 to complete a trial extension of local office opening hours.

Further details of the performance measures and targets are set out in the agency's business plan for 1992-93, a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House on publication.

Relocation

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the terms on which civil servants are moved in the public interest.

Mr. Dorrell: At present civil servants moving home in the public interest are entitled to a wide range of financial assistance. This package will be improved for those small number of staff who find, as a result of their move, that the proceeds of the sale of their old property are not sufficient to repay their mortgage. Departments and agencies will have the freedom to offer such staff loans, at commercial rates of interest, repayable on the same terms as the existing scheme for making advances of salary for house purchases. Departments and agencies will also, in particularly difficult cases, be free to offer advances of salary to meet mortgage shortfalls, on the same terms as the advances of salary offered to meet bridging loan shortfalls.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Staff Salaries

Mr. Jopling: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North West (Mr. Banks) of 20 May, Official Report, column 143, what is the total monthly cost of the salaries and other costs to public funds of the staff in the Clerk's Department employed on duties principally related to departmental Select Committees.

Mr. Beith: The total monthly cost to public funds of the salaries and other expenses of staff in the Clerk's Department employed on duties principally related to departmental Select Committees is estimated to be £175,862. This figure includes superannuation and employer's national insurance contributions.

So far, eight informal working groups have been convened and others will be assembled if necessary. Other staff are required to provide office support facilities and to liaise with the local authorities over such matters as transport and security.

Ministers, their private secretaries and the ambassador to the United Nations will travel first class, all other delegates will travel club class. The estimated cost of the delegation's travel and subsistence, including hotel costs, will be about £190,000. NGOs will be responsible for their own travel and accommodation expenses.

Mr. Goodlad: The latest confirmed figure, for 1990-91, is £1,345,935.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the number of vehicles owned by Her Majesty's Government or hired by Her Majesty's Government situated at the British embassy in Abu Dhabi.

Mr. Goodlad: There are five official vehicles at the British embassy in Abu Dhabi, three owned by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and two by the Ministry of Defence. Vehicles are hired to replace one of these only in the event of breakdown.

Refuseniks

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik David Aptecman and his family of Moscow.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can consider raising with the Russian authorities the case of David Aptecman and his family, but to make effective representations we would need further details.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and any agency which reports to his Department in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has no direct responsibility for United Kingdom coastal policy, but provides advice to other Government Departments on the international implications of Her Majesty's Government's maritime policy and monitors the policy of other governments, particularly in relation to the law of the sea.

Antarctica

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to bring forward legislation to repeal the Antarctic Minerals Act 1989; and if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards Antarctica.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government are fully committed to implementation of the environmental protocol to the Antarctic treaty. Ratification of the protocol and repeal of the Antarctic Minerals Act 1989 will depend on the introduction of legislation to give effect to the provisions of the protocol.

We shall introduce legislation when the business of the House permits.

Croatia

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to establish diplomatic relations with Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This is under active consideration.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: While the treaty on European union was being prepared for publication more than 1,000 copies of the text were made available to Parliament. Copies were also made available free of charge to members of the public on request from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Some 100 copies were sent out.

The treaty was published as a Command Paper—Cm 1934—on 7 May and is available from HMSO at a cost of £13·30. A total of 2,500 copies have been printed, of which 400 were sent to Parliament.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

An Order in Council was made on 4 June which implements the full range of sanctions under United Nations Security Council resolution 757 and includes provisions covering the assets freeze secured by the Treasury directions.

PRIME MINISTER

Newham

Q6. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he will pay an official visit to the London borough of Newham.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will be making further visits to many parts of the country and hopes to include different parts of London among them.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 9 June.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 9 June.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is visiting Colombia to have discussions with President Gavria on a wide range of issues. He will carry out other official duties including an inspection of an anti-narcotics police training school.

Earth Summit

Mr. Burns: To ask the Prime Minister what is his assessment of the likely outcome of the Earth summit in Rio.

The Prime Minister: I am committed to the success of the Earth summit and will attend the meeting with other world leaders.

We shall sign the framework convention on climate change and have joined with other members of the European Community in urging all countries to sign and ratify it as soon as possible thereafter. This convention will be a significant first step in tackling the global problems of climate change.

We shall also sign the convention on biodiversity, which should provide an initial step in protecting natural habitats and the range of species throughout the world. This will be subject to satisfactory arrangements that take full account of our concern about financial commitments.

We have already announced that we will provide new and additional financial resources through the global environment facility to assist developing countries in meeting the incremental costs of their commitments under the convention.

We hope that an effective statement of principles on the sustainable development of the world's forests will be agreed and a process to follow the principles up.

Agenda 21 provides a coherent framework for action by all to achieve more sustainable types of development and growth. We attach great importance to its agreement at the meeting. We hope that it will contain a declaration of basic principles and that stronger machinery will be established to carry forward work at a national and international level.

EDUCATION

International Education Programme

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has about the international educational programme which places students from abroad in United Kingdom schools.

Mr. Forman: The Intercultural Educational Programme—IEP—is a registered charity which promotes intercultural learning through exchange programmes for students, workers, teachers, families and youth groups throughout the world. IEP is the United Kingdom national office of AFS Intercultural Programs, an American based exchange organisation which has offices throughout the world.

As part of its activities, IEP organises placements which enable 15 to 18-year-old pupils from abroad to spend a period, usually one academic year, living with a British family and attending a local school. Similar placements are also organised for United Kingdom pupils abroad.

Dysentery

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement concerning the recent cases of dysentery at the school in Seaham in 1991 and the schools in Easington in 1992.

Mr. Forth: The matter is one for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. I understand, however, that there is no evidence to suggest that the reported cases originated at the schools attended by the children.

Ealing Schools

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to announce his decision on the schools' reorganisation proposals put to him by Ealing council and the churches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend proposes to reach a decision on the outstanding proposals in respect of the county and voluntary schools as soon as possible after his decision on the statutory proposals from the grant-maintained secondary schools to change their age of admission from 12 to 11. He hopes that will be in the course of the summer.

Higher Education

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will establish a quality audit of higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The Government are committed to ensuring that effective quality assurance arrangements exist in higher education. One element, in line with the policy set out in Cm 1561, will be a United Kingdom-wide higher education quality council established by higher education institutions collectively. This will have three units, devoted to quality audit, quality enhancement and credit and access. The council has been developed in discussion with my Department. I am confident that it will do a good job.

European Cultural Commissioner

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what draft directives affecting what may be taught in schools are being considered by the Cultural Commissioner of the EEC.

Mr. Forman: None.

Further Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the aggregate number of students by full-time equivalent by college studying in further education colleges for the academic years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Forman [holding answer 8 June 1992]: The table gives the full-time equivalent student numbers for further education colleges which responded to the "Further Education Statistical Record" at November 1990. This information is not yet available for the academic year 1991-92.

DEFENCE

Navigational Markers

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those fairways, harbours and creeks in the United Kingdom which the Royal Navy administers or provides navigational markers where there is no Royal Naval presence or regular naval activity; and if he will set out the policy reasons for retaining these.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are four such areas other than those which lie within dockyard ports: the Thames estuary, Benbecula, St Kilda and Cope channel. Markers are maintained in these areas to indicate safe navigation or to mark hazards such as wrecks.

Solent (Navy Administration)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out those creeks and harbours outside of Portsmouth harbour for which Her Majesty's harbour master has administrative responsibility in the Solent; and if he will set out the policy reasons for the Royal Navy's administration of each of them.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are three creeks and harbours in this category: Hillhead harbour, Ryde Harbour and Wootton creek. We are considering whether it remains appropriate for the Queen's harbour master to exercise waterspace management and administration in these areas.

Dredging

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those areas where the Royal Navy or Ministry of Defence procures dredging.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The three main geographical areas where the Royal Navy procures dredging are as follows:

Scotland
Rosyth
RNAD Crombie
Invergordon
Greenock
Faslane
RNAD Coulport

Portsmouth
Main harbour
HMS Nelson (Gunwharf)
HMS Dolphin
Gosport oil fuel depot
RNAD
Royal Clarence yard
Harbour mooring areas
Entrance channel

Devonport
Royal William yard basin
Shallow dock entrance
Ernesettle jetty
Main approach channel

Submarines (The Minches)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number and duration of submarine exercises in the Minches since 1985.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Military Bridging System

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the origins, purpose and state of progress of the bridging for the 1990s military bridging system; which elements of the system will be (a) wheeled or (b) tracked; which equipment it is proposed to replace; how much has been (i) spent and (ii) committed to date; which units, based in which country, will receive the proposed equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: "Bridging for the 90s" (BR90) is needed to replace in-service bridging as it comes to the end of its planned life. The purpose of BR90 is to enhance the mobility of armoured formations. The system will enable longer bridges to be built faster with less manpower.

BR90 is a modular system. Most of its elements can be launched and recovered by bridge-laying and by wheeled bridge-laying vehicles. Some 60 per cent. of the bridges are intended to be tank launched. The tank launched bridges have completed contractor trials and are now undergoing user trials with a British Army unit. The truck launched system has commenced contractor trials.

BR90 will replace the No 8 and 9 tank bridges and Crusader tank bridge transporters. Some medium girder bridges will also be replaced.

Payments to date total £26·4 million, and a further £7·9 million is committed to the completion of the development phase. We have recently committed £15·3 million to preparation for production.

The BR90 system will be deployed with Royal Engineer units in both Germany and United Kingdom.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current estimate of the number of European fighter aircraft which will be required by the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Aitken: The current planning assumption is that the RAF will require 250 European fighter aircraft. Final EFA numbers are, however, still subject to study.

Anti-air Warfare Radar

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place an order for an anti-air warfare in-board radar simulator.

Mr. Aitken: Current plans are to place a contract at the end of 1992.

Air Defence System

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place an order for a very short range air defence system for surface ships.

Mr. Aitken: My Department is currently considering a proposal for a collaborative feasibility study with Italy to provide an affordable autonomous ship-borne weapon system for very short range air defence. This would provide protection against future anti-surface ship missiles and would enter service early in the next decade. Subject to satisfactory progress in negotiations, we hope to place a contract for the study early next year, following a competition.

Attack Helicopters

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the programme for the procurement of the attack helicopter.

Mr. Aitken: Later this year we intend to issue to industry a request for proposals for the supply of an attack helicopter. Following assessment of the responses we receive, we intend to place a contract through a prime contractor which would allow the chosen aircraft to enter service with the British Army before the end of the decade.

Local Area Missile System

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is the intention of the United Kingdom to withdraw from the multinational programme for the development of the next generation local area missile system.

Mr. Aitken: No Sir.

HMS Turbulent

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the report of the investigation of the fire aboard HMS Turbulent.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Mr. Jamieson) on 2 June, Official Report, column 540.

Menwith Hill

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what part of the United States military operates from Menwith hill, north Yorkshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Personnel from all four United States armed services are employed at Menwith hill.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are employed at Menwith hill, north Yorkshire by (a) the National Security Agency and (b) the British Government.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Currently some 1,200 United States department of defence personnel and 560 United Kingdom nationals are employed at Menwith hill.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the past, present and future role of the base at Menwith hill, north Yorkshire;

(2) what is the purpose of the underground operations at Menwith hill, north Yorkshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States communications facility at Menwith hill is located on a Ministry of Defence site made available to the United States department of defence. It is an integral part of the world wide department of defence communications network but I am not prepared to comment further on its operational role. It operates with the full knowledge and consent of Her Majesty's Government.

Vigilante Forces

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to prevent former British service men from providing military expertise and support for extreme right vigilante forces in South Africa and other countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Officers may require prior approval from the Ministry of Defence before taking up certain business appointments within two years of leaving the armed forces, but it would be impractical, and an undue restriction on the freedom of individuals, to impose wider restrictions on the employment taken up by former service personnel.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Malawi

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what extra provisions Her Majesty's Government have made for drought relief in Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Most recently we have allocated £4 million for drought-related activities in Malawi, these funds being derived from those parts of the regular aid which were suspended last month because of Malawi's human rights record. We are considering urgently with the relevant relief agencies and the Malawi authorities how best these funds might be used. This latest allocation is in addition to the 5,000 tonnes of cereals provided earlier this year for Mozambican refugees in Malawi; and the £1 million contribution to the World Food Programme's targeted feeding programme for vulnerable groups among Malawi's own population.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining Her Majesty's Government's current policy on bilateral aid to Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 20 May, at column 166.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide details of measures being taken by Her Majesty's Government to monitor the distribution of humanitarian aid in Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In accordance with our normal practice, primary responsibility for monitoring humanitarian aid provided by Her Majesty's Government will rest with those international organisations and non-governmental organisations through which the aid is channelled. Reports on the utilisation of multilateral contributions through the World Food Programme will be made to its governing body, the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes, in due course.

Promotion of Democracy

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will identify the budget authorisation within the current or past expenditure of the European Economic Community concerning the promotion of democracy or democratic systems or institutions; what past and current sums have been or are allocated in ECU at sterling equivalents; where lists of grants made can be obtained; what groups or organisations in the United Kingdom have obtained grants; and for what purposes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As a result of the November 1991 Development Council resolution on human rights, democracy and development, the promotion of democracy now forms an integral part of the aid relationship between the EC and developing countries. To consolidate Community action in this area two new budget lines were established in 1991; B7-5052 for the promotion of human rights and democracy in developing countries; and B7-5078 for the support of democratisation in Latin America, both with an allocation of 10 million ecu, about £7 million, for 1992. No projects have yet been fully implemented, but we would expect detailed information about lists of grants and recipients to be made available in due course. A 5 million ecu, £3·5 million, project for support of democracy in eastern Europe—B7-6000—has recently been approved under the PHARE programme.

Climate Change

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken by his Department to assist countries to (a) assemble stocks of crop plants likely to be more suitable to possible climate changes, (b) review irrigation schemes in the light of climate changes and (c) develop guidance to farmers and village communities on the likely impact of climate change.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration is funding research to predict the influence of increased atmospheric carbon dioxide on the growth and yield of crops such as sorghum and groundnut. Through contributions to centres in the Consultative Group for International Agricultural Research, Britain is a major contributor to the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources. Under its renewable natural resources research strategy the ODA supports research into crop physiology and the development of new species which will be better suited to changing environmental conditions, particularly the environmental stresses of drought and salinity.

The ODA also provides support for genetic resources conservation of crop plants and their wild host relatives at international agricultural research centres and is funding research projects in the Sahel and in the middle east.

The ODA is funding two studies on the impact of climate change for the Governments of Ghana and Kenya. This work includes specialist exploration of the potential effects of climate change on agricultural practices, including irrigation. The studies will present policy options for Governments and will address the institutional means by which these could be implemented, including the need for extension programmes to provide guidance to local communities.

Air Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support is currently given by the Overseas Development Administration to assist with technology transfer for countries seeking regional conventions on the prevention of trans-boundary air pollution.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No such projects, linked specifically to prospective regional conventions, are being supported currently from bilateral aid funds. We do not have available sufficiently detailed information to indicate whether aid made available through multilateral channels is used for the activities specified.

Family Planning

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money is allocated by his Department towards family planning services; and if he has any plans to increase the allocation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Aid programme spending on direct population activities totalled over £26 million in 1991, which represents a 55 per cent. increase over the last two years. Population is a priority in the aid programme, and we hope to continue to increase our bilateral support to population programmes and reproductive health services in Africa and Asia, to the United Nations Population Fund, and to non-governmental organisations active in this area.

Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he possesses on the financial commitments advocated by the World bank and the International Monetary Fund to ameliorate environmental degradation and pollution in developing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The "World Development Report 1992", published by the World bank in May on development and the environment has been placed in the Library of the House. Chapter 9 of the report sets out the World bank's broad estimates of the costs for key sectors of implementing policies and programmes for accelerating environmentally responsible development.

The International Monetary Fund provides resources to enable countries pursuing economic reform to cope with balance of payments problems. It does not produce information on the costs of environmental policy measures.

Local Health Services

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money is being allocated by his Department towards (a) the creation of facilities in villages and urban neighbourhoods using paramedical personnel, (b) expanding health outreach support to individual households and (c) encouraging health promotion through localised organisations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration spent some £61 million in bilateral health sector assistance in 1990, the latest year for which figures are available. This amount includes support to projects, including non-governmental organisations, active in these three areas, but allocations are not broken down in a form that allows us to identify expenditure in this particular way.

Aid Targeting

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of Overseas Development Agency funds are targeted (a) through non-governmental organisation projects and (b) through the International Monetary Fund and the World bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1990-91, the latest statistics available, Overseas Development Administration funds administered through non-governmental organisations represented 5·2 per cent. of the gross aid programme, and the funds channelled through the International Monetary Fund and the World bank 10·2 per cent. of the gross aid programme.

Climate Change

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much is currently allocated by his Department to protect vulnerable low-lying coastal areas from the possible effects of climate changes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration is funding three studies of the impact of climate change, including sea level rise at a total cost of £362,500, three projects on coastal zone management at a cost of £1,850,000 and a research project on the use of artificial reef blocks costing £245,000. The details of these projects are as follows:

Country	Project	Value £	Dates
Kenya	Study on the impacts of climate change	175,000	1991-92
Ghana	Study on the impacts of climate change	175,000	1991-92
Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States	Preliminary study of Sea Level Rise	12,500	1991
Maldives	Support for the development of coastal management and conservation strategies	450,000	1989-94
Indonesia	Coastal zone management and shrimp culture	1,300,000	1990-94
British Virgin Islands	Production of coastal zone atlas	100,000	1992
Maldives	Research into the rehabilitation of degraded reefs using artificial reef blocks	245,000	1989-93

Climate change is one of the key areas for which funding is available for developing countries from the global environment facility—GEF. Britain has committed £40·3 million to the initial funding of the GEF.

Vietnam

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will consider establishing a know-how fund for Vietnam.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have already made provision for a modest technical co-operation programme with Vietnam and have agreed with the Government of Vietnam that the priority for the transfer of know-how under this programme should be the management of economic reform. We are discussing a project that will provide training in this area to four or five key Vietnamese institutions.

Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy of promoting the interests of biodiversity in rain forests.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ODA publication "Biodiversity and Developing Countries—Issues and Options" explains the priority the ODA gives to promoting biodiversity conservation, including in rain forests. Bilateral aid projects, both on a country to country basis and through British NGOs, are supported. Research is supported through ODA's natural resources programmes including the forestry research programme managed by the Oxford Forestry Institute. The ODA contributes to a variety of multilateral agencies whose programmes also include biodiversity conservation. In addition biodiversity is one of the key areas for which funding to cover certain agreed costs is available for developing countries from the global environment facility. Britain has already committed £40·3 million to the initial financing of the GEF.

Substances Abuse

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held between the Government and representatives of the United Kingdom drinks industry relating to the programme on substance abuse of the World Health Organisation, particularly as it affects alcohol advertising and marketing in third-world countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No such discussions have been held.

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the British financial contribution to the programme on substance abuse of the World Health Organisation in the current financial year; and what are the projected contributions for the next two years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have contributed £200,000 since the programme was established in September 1990. Our financial contribution in the current financial year has not yet been finalised and projections for subsequent years are not available.

Kenya

Mr. Matthew Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refuges appeal for assistance to refugees in Kenya; and what aid Her Majesty's Government are providing for drought-stricken areas of Kenya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 5 June my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development announced a pledge of £1 million to the UNHCR appeal. A further £1 million is being given to WFP and CARE to help supply, transport, distribute and monitor food for 500,000 Kenyans in the most seriously affected districts of northern Kenya.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lobsters

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he is making to the EC about the proposals on lobster sizes.

Mr. Curry: With effect from 1 June 1992 the definition of minimum landing size of lobsters was revised to remove ambiguity in the legal text of the relevant EC Regulation in certain of the languages of the Community. The United Kingdom industry was consulted about this change last June and informed of the Council's decision in October 1991. However, in response to very recently expressed concerns we are considering the matter urgently.

Shellfish

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the number of (a) businesses, (b) employees and (c) self-employed persons who will be affected by the delay in making arrangements for the carrying out of sampling of shellfish in readiness for the necessity to comply with EEC directive 91/492/EEC and 91/493/EEC.

Mr. Curry: I expect to publish a preliminary classification this summer for comment, and to have the classification in operation from 1 January 1993 as required.

Habitats

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce new legislation as a result of the provisions relating to the marine environment in the EC habitats directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We are still at an early stage in considering the implementation of the EC Habitats Directive, which was adopted on 21 May. We shall announce proposals in due course.

Seismic Surveys

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the compensation requirements for oil companies to pay (a) fishermen for (i) fixed gear and (ii) lobster pots and (b) net and line fishermen for damage to gear and for suspension of fishing during seismic surveys.

Mr. Curry: Any payment by oil companies to fishermen whose activities are affected by seismic surveys is entirely a matter for negotiation between the parties concerned.

Mink

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Department gives to establishments, licensed under the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987, on the avoidance of spread of diseases of mink between establishments and to other wild species.

Mr. Soames: There are currently 22 establishments licensed under the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987 to keep mink for fur-bearing purposes in England, and over 38,000 individual mink are kept under these arrangements. In the last 12 months there have been no reports of escapes received by the Ministry. No mink farms currently operate in Wales.

Sheep Dip

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the information sought by the Veterinary Products Committee from the manufacturers and distributors of organophosphorous sheep dips includes the results of tests on humans before the products were licensed; whether this data was verified by an independent assessor; and when he expects to publish this information.

Mr. Soames: Section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 prohibits the disclosure of information received in support of an application for a product licence. However, the Veterinary Products Committee has noted, as part of its current review of sheep dip licences, that certain aspects of the products and conditions of use need further evaluation, including studies of farm operators, including blood tests and details of protective clothing worn as well as studies to show which areas of the bodies of operators are most exposed. The companies concerned have been asked to provide additional data by the end of 1992.

The conclusions of the review will be published once it has been completed.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will suspend the use of organophosphorous sheep dips and the compulsory sheep scab eradication scheme until the Veterinary Products Committee's evaluation of the health side effects on operators is complete.

Mr. Soames: The independent Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) has recently advised that, at present, there is no clear evidence that licensed organophosphorous sheep dips cause any unacceptable level of health risk to humans when used in accordance with the label instructions. On the basis of this advice I do not propose to suspend the licences for these products.

With regard to the compulsory sheep scab eradication scheme I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) on 8 June at col. 12.

Pesticide Poisoning

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate the number of pesticide poisoning incidents involving birds or animals for the years ended 31 March 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Soames: The number of confirmed incidents in England and Wales involving birds or animals were as follows:

	Number
1989-90	89
1990-91	100

[1] Subject to some outstanding analyses.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those incidents of poisoning involving vertebrate wildlife in each of the last four years indicating the number of incidents investigated and the number in which pesticides were identified as the likely cause of death.

Mr. Curry: The numbers of incidents in Great Britain involving vertebrate wildlife were as follows:

Year	Vertebrate wildlife incidents investigated	Pesticides identified as likely cause of poisoning
1988	277	72
1989	343	96
1990	373	82
1991	372	72

Further information is published in the annual "Pesticide Poisoning of Animals" report, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Cereals

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the revised intervention prices for cereals for 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 recently decided by the Council of Ministers of £93, £86 and £80, respectively, will apply to feed-quality cereals.

Mr. Curry: The agreement reached by the Council of Ministers on 21 May 1992 included a request to the Commission to submit proposals to the Council on the standard qualities to which prices should apply.

Irradiated Food

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on the development of detection tests for irradiated food.

Mr. Gummer: My Department's food science laboratory today published a report in the "Food Analysis" series, a methodology for the detection of irradiated herbs and spices, using a technique called thermoluminescence.

The test has been validated internationally and recently was the subject of a successful collaborative trial in European laboratories co-ordinated by the Community bureau of reference (BCR). A summary of the BCR results appears in the report.

Seismic Surveys

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will suspend the licence to Elf to undertake a seismic survey until after the summer fishing and yachting season.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The licensee, now Elf Enterprise (Caledonia) Ltd, was granted a licence in 1991 to explore for and to produce oil and gas lying under block 98-112. No separate licence or permission is needed by the licensee to carry out the seismic survey. The company carried out consultations prior to beginning the survey, and I understand adjusted its plans as a consequence.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Associations (Grants)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list details of grants and loans made to each unregistered housing association in Northern Ireland by the Housing Executive from 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992.

Mr. Atkins: The Chairman of the Housing Executive has advised me that there were no loans made to unregistered housing associations between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1992. However, the following grants were made during this period:

Glenall housing co-operative	7,500

Hotel Inspections

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what inspections of hotels are carried out each year by the Northern Ireland tourist board.

Mr. Atkins: Under the Tourism (Northern Ireland) Order 1992, the board carries out an annual statutory inspection of hotels to ensure that premises meet minimum standards and, as necessary, in response to complaints. In addition, under a voluntary scheme annual inspections are carried out to determine the classification and grading of hotels.

Teachers (Retirement)

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, columns 440-41 whether he will publish the guidance issued by the education and library boards and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools relating to the enhancement of pensions of teachers taking early retirement;

(2) whether he will state the number of teachers in controlled schools that each of the education and library boards decided should be permitted to take early retirement and the number of teachers in Catholic maintained schools that the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools decided should be permitted to take early retirement in each of the last three financial years, showing in each case the number that were awarded pension enhancement.

Mr. Hanley: I will arrange for the guidance issued by the education and library boards and the Council for Catholic Schools to be placed in the Library.

For the financial years 1989-90 and 1990-91, the education and library boards and the boards of governors of Catholic maintained schools decided on the number of teachers to be released under the premature retirement scheme in the controlled and Catholic maintained schools respectively; only cases relating to the efficient discharge of the employers' function being subject to Department of Education approval. These same bodies also decided on the level of enhancement.

Under the arrangements introduced in the 1991-92 financial year, decisions on premature retirement, including enhancement, have been taken by the boards of governors of controlled and maintained schools which have fully delegated budgets. In the case of special schools and schools with partially delegated budgets, these decisions have been taken by the education and library boards in respect of the controlled school and by the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools in respect of Catholic maintained schools.

The number of premature retirements on grounds of redundancy and of efficient discharge, and the number awarded enhancement in each of the last three financial years, are as follows:

Board	Controlled	Maintained
1989-90[1]
Belfast education and library board	25	17
Western education and library board	28	15
North Eastern education and library board	47	33

Rural Areas

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, columns 441-42, if he will state the person or body by whom each member of the Northern Ireland Rural Development Council was first nominated or proposed.

Mr. Hanley: The members of the Rural Development Council for Northern Ireland were nominated by the following bodies:

The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland nominated Jimmy Armstrong, Pat Jess, John Kelly, Aideen McGinley, Patsy McShane and Malcom Woods.
The Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside nominated Robert Hanna.
The Rural Community Network nominated Mark Conway, John Donaghy, Paul McAllister and John McGrady.
District Councils nominated John Fee, Warren Loane and Malachy McSparran.
The Ulster Farmers' Union nominated Hugh Linehan.
The Northern Ireland Agricultural Producers' Association nominated Wilfred Mitchell.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, columns 441-42, (1) if he will list the wards and townlands in addition to those mentioned in his answer in which the Inter-Departmental Committee on Rural Development established that pockets of deprivation existed;

(2) if he will state the other criteria in addition to geographic and social isolation, high unemployment, demographic imbalances, declining services and poor facilities that were used to select the most deprived rural areas for the purpose of the rural development initiative and give the definitions of geographic isolation and social isolation employed by the Inter-Departmental Committee on Rural Development;

(3) if he will state (a) the precise level of unemployment employed by the Inter-Departmental Committee on Rural Development in selecting the most deprived rural areas for the purpose of the rural development initiative and (b) what demographic imbalances and services and facilities were taken into account.

Mr. Hanley: My reply of 2 June, Official Report, columns 441-42, named five main areas which were identified by the Inter-Departmental Committee on Rural Development (IDCRD) as representing concentrations of the most deprived rural areas of Northern Ireland. The IDCRD also agreed that pockets of deprivation could be isolated in most rural areas on a ward or townland basis but that attempts to be too geographically definitive could be unnecessarily restrictive. Accordingly no list of such wards and townlands has been prepared. Rural community groups from outside the primary target areas are not excluded from applying to the Rural Development Council for advice and assistance.

All the criteria used to select the most deprived rural areas can be subsumed within the list included in the question. Geographical isolation was defined on the basis of the absence of car ownership and the close conformity between areas of above average deprivation and the location of marginal or disadvantaged agricultural land.

The principal measure of unemployment was derived from the 1981 census of population and was defined as the percentage of economically active males not in employment. This was used in combination with other measures of deprivation also taken from the census of population to develop an index of multiple deprivation.

In its wide-ranging consultations with rural interests the IDCRD was advised of the problem of the emigration of young people from rural areas and that the elderly were forming an increasing proportion of rural populations. The IDCRD was made aware of limitations of public transport and of high levels of unfit dwellings in rural areas.

Housing Grants

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 286, under what statutory authority the Northern Ireland Housing Executive suspended the statutory scheme for housing grants; and when the scheme will be reinstated.

Mr. Atkins: The chairman of the Housing Executive has advised me that the statutory grants scheme has not been suspended.

It is anticipated that a new renovation grants scheme will be introduced later this year and the executive decided to concentrate its efforts in completing all existing formal detailed applications, to enable processes to be completed before the new scheme comes into operation. In that context, the executive decided not to accept new preliminary applications after 28 February 1992. Applications for special grants and grants dealing with statutory notices such as public health orders continue to be accepted, and from 14 May, the Executive has been prepared again to accept preliminary applications for certain grants relating to the disabled.

TRANSPORT

Shipping Registration

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many Dutch trawlers were registered at British ports, by port, in 1989, 1990, 1991 and the latest available date.

Mr. Norris: Details of registered vessels are not kept by type of vessel. The following table is therefore not limited to trawlers but is in respect of all Dutch vessels on the British fishing vessel register.

Port	1989	1990	1991	1992[1]	Total

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 189, if he will list the numbers of (a) Spanish and (b) Dutch fishing vessels registered as British at each port where such vessels are registered.

Mr. Norris: The information as at 5 June for wholly or mainly Spanish or Dutch-owned vessels is as follows:

Port	Spanish	Dutch
Aberdeen	7	1

Women Passengers (Safety)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines are currently provided by his Department to transport planners and providers concerning the provision of public transport which is safer for women passengers.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No such guidelines have been issued. However, the Department co-sponsored the passenger guidance leaflet published by the Suzy Lamplugh Trust, "Travel Safely by Public Transport". The Department's working group on violence to road passenger transport staff has recommended, among other things, that bus operators install radios and video cameras in their vehicles to protect employees. These measures also help all passengers to travel more safely.

Vehicle Towing

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what study he has made of the incidence of accidents on motorways arising from the presence of vehicles being towed by others which are not specifically designed for towing; and under what circumstances it is permissible for such vehicles to enter the motorway system.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In 1990 there were 32 casualty accidents involving a vehicle towing another vehicle on a motorway. This is approximately 0.5 per cent. of motorway accidents and one in 8,000 of all accidents. Information is not collected on whether the towing vehicle was designed for the purpose.

A vehicle being towed in such a manner constitutes a trailer and as such is prohibited from the right hand lane of three or more lane motorways.

Distress Watch

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will set out the policy reasons for BT to provide distress watch arrangements on 2182 kHz but not channel 16;

(2) if he will set out the policy reasons for coastguard stations to maintain a continuous listening watch on channel 16 but not on 2182 kHz.

Mr. Norris: Her Majesty's Coastguard keeps watch on VHF channel 16 because not only is it the designated VHF distress channel, it is also the normal calling channel for VHF traffic. It is essential for the Coastguard to monitor and use this channel for them to carry out their functions of maintaining an effective search and rescue organisation. It would make no sense for the distress watch on channel 16 to be separated from Her Majesty's Coastguard's other functions. VHF is used by most fishing and pleasure craft in United Kingdom waters, few of which have MF transmitters. Most radio distress calls requiring immediate response by the Coastguard are made on channel 16. Since 1978 Her Majesty's Coastguard has put in place 120 remote radio sites linked to its 21 rescue centres which are manned 24 hours a day. This is a more comprehensive VHF cover than is now provided by BT.

The distress watch on 500 kHz and 2182 kHz has continued with BT because it has the necessary sites, equipment and, for morse on 500 kHz, trained operators; it would not be worthwhile duplicating these for Her Majesty's Coastguard, especially given the international plan to end the use of 500 kHz as a distress frequency by 1999.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has made of the contribution VHF direct calling could make to a cost reduction in the BT distress watch contract.

Mr. Norris: No such specific studies have been made. Use of VHF digital selective calling (VHF/DSC) would considerably increase the costs of distress watch since much new equipment would be required both at sea and ashore. The cost of this equipment would not be justified by gains in effectiveness.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the sources of his advice for the review on cost savings on the BT distress watch contract.

Mr. Norris: The review into the cost of the provision of the BT distress watch service is an internal one to be undertaken by the Department's marine emergency organisation, of which HM Coastguard forms an integral part.

A595

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give his latest traffic flow figures, including those for heavy goods vehicles, for the A595 road between Grizebeck service station and Broughton in Furness, together with those between Grizebeck service station and Soutergate.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Cumbria county council's transport policies and programme document for 1992-93 published in 1991 shows that on the trunk road between Grizebeck service station and Broughton in Furness the annual average daily traffic is 5,500 with 5 per cent. being heavy goods vehicles. Comparable figures for the local road between Grizebeck service station and Soutergate are 4,600 and 8 per cent.

Clifton Bypass

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the date upon which the A453 (Clifton bypass) public inquiry is to be held.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The draft orders for the A453 Clifton lane improvement are expected to be published next year and it is likely that public inquiries will then follow early in 1994.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the terms of reference for the A453 (Clifton bypass) inquiry will include (a) the need for a bypass around the Clifton estate, as opposed to through it, and (b) the wider traffic implications for the Nottingham transport infrastructure.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The public inquiries will consider objections made to draft orders published under the Highways Act 1980 together with suggested alternative routes, and will be held by an independent inspector appointed on the nomination of the Lord Chancellor. The inspector, who is responsible for the conduct of the inquiries, will wish to hear all relevant evidence before preparing his report and recommendations for submission to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport.

M3 Extension

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the letting of the main contract for construction of the M3 extension: what will be the process whereby tenders are invited; whether he intends to await the outcome of European Commission legal proceedings relating to the environmental impact assessment directive before inviting tenders for the construction contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Preparations for the implementation of this important scheme are proceeding. Tenders have been invited for the main works and are due for return towards the end of August. In accordance with usual practice, an announcement will be made when a contract is let.

Traffic, Greenwich

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the number of traffic accidents, identifying separately accidents to pedestrians and accidents resulting in fatalities, occurring in the Greenwich town centre area in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Norris: The table shows the number of road traffic accidents involving personal injury in the Greenwich town centre area notified to the Department, and a breakdown of the resulting casualties. Data are shown for the years 1982 to 1990. Data for 1991 are not yet available.

Injury accidents, and casualties by road user type and severity: Greenwich town centre[1]: 1982 to 1990.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the volume of traffic, broken down between different categories of vehicles, passing through Greenwich town centre in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Norris: The latest estimates are as follows:

Estimated daily vehicle flows through Greenwich town centre[1]: 1990

Cars and taxis	26,000
Buses and coaches	940

The Department's surveys do not permit annual changes in traffic volume to be estimated for small areas.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information is available to his Department on the average speed of vehicles passing through the Greenwich town centre area at different times of the day, on weekdays and at weekends.

Mr. Norris: The latest available estimates are as follows:

Average vehicle speeds, Greenwich town centre[1]: Weekdays

	1988 (mph)
Morning peak	11·3
Day-time off-peak	11·5
Evening peak	10·6

[1] The main one-way system and adjacent sections of High road, Creek road and Romney road.

No information is available for weekends.

Trans-Pennine Motorways

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in connection with consideration of additional trans-Pennine motorway crossings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I hope to be in a position to be able to make a statement shortly about the findings and recommendations of the consultant's report on trans-Pennine road crossings.

A19

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department intends to install emergency phones along the length of the A19 through the constituency of Easington.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are no proposals to install emergency telephones on the A19 trunk road at present.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department intends to install roadway lighting alongside the section of the A19 which runs through Peterlee.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are no plans at present to light the section of the A19 at Peterlee.

Train Doors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Health and Safety Executive will take action against the current and past chairmen and executive directors of British Rail in respect of causing the deaths of passengers by their neglect in respect of design and maintenance of carriage doors.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety Executive has not yet completed its full report. I expect the Health and Safety Commission to submit the report to the Secretary of State with its advice later in the summer. It is for the executive to consider what further action may be appropriate.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the projected route of the new motorway spur road that would link the M25 to the proposed fifth terminal at Heathrow airport.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The possible route of the spur road depends on enhancement of the M25 in this sector. We expect to show the Department's proposals for this to the public shortly. It will then be for British Airports Authority to come forward with proposals for the spur road.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and any agency which reports to his Department in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's memorandum on this subject which was submitted to the Environment Committee of this House in the last session. It has now been published by HMSO as part of the Environment Committee's report on Coastal Zone Protection and Planning, Volume II, Minutes of Evidence and Appendices.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the privacy implications arising from the commercial use of personal data held by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency and obtained via statute, and the disclosure to police computers of digitised photographs on the driving licence.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Consideration is being given to the eventual use of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's database for commercial purposes. The concerns of individuals receiving third party mail have been recognised. Any decision will take these and the requirements of the Data Protection Act into account.

The police have access to the driver licensing records for law enforcement purposes under the terms of the Road Traffic Act 1988. This removes any data protection restriction on such statutory disclosure. Photographs of drivers will eventually form part of those records and the Data Protection Registrar will be consulted on the implications.

Fuel Efficiency

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the introduction of a mandatory minimum fuel efficiency standard for vehicles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 3 June at column 522.

Bicycles

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he gives to local authorities regarding the provision of secure parking places for cycles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Advice on providing secure, safe and convenient cycle parking is contained in Chapter 6 of the Department's Local Transport Note 1/89 (HMSO), "Making Way for Cyclists". This is one in our series of local transport note publications which offer local authorities detailed guidance on providing for cyclists.

Channel Tunnel

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to alter the route of the channel tunnel rail link as announced by his predecessor last October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: No. The Government remain committed to their preferred route corridor announced last October, approaching London from the east along the lines proposed by Ove Arup, with a terminus at King's Cross. We have no intention of reconsidering other options rejected at that time. We have asked British Rail to define a route along our preferred corridor and expect firm proposals from them by the end of the year. Once we have considered the British Rail proposals, we will announce a detailed route for public consultation, and a full environmental impact assessment will be undertaken.

Railway Electrification

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning current progress of the Leeds/Bradford electrification scheme.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have given the West Yorkshire passenger transport authority credit approvals for the infrastructure. The Government has exceptionally agreed that the West Yorkshire passenger transport executive should acquire the rolling stock by means of an operating lease.

Rail Services

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those services which British Rail may contract out to the private sector under existing legislation, the services which have been so contracted and the services which cannot be contracted out pending amendment to existing legislation.

Mr. Freeman: Under existing legislation, British Rail may contract out to the private sector any of its support services provided that, in so doing, it acts in a financially prudent manner and discharges adequately its statutory duties. BR has already made significant progress in contracting out of such activities, including: all manufacture and some heavy repair of locomotives and rolling stock; all train catering on Network SouthEast and regional railways; Red Star's road collection and delivery service for parcels; design and supply of signalling systems; track weedkilling and reballasting services; train cleaning and station maintenance; and station car park management. BR does not consider that it is empowered to contract out passenger train and track signalling operations under existing legislation, but I have asked BR to consider what further non-core activities might be contracted out.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent he expects officials of British Rail to consult local authorities about the provision of rail services.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail regularly consults the transport users' consultative committees and, for the London area, the London regional passengers' committee which are the statutory bodies for representing consumer interests.

Where services are supported by a passenger transport executive the level of service is specified by the constituent local authorities of the passenger transport authority. Elsewhere, the extent of consultation between BR and local authorities is for them to agree. However, I understand that BR consults a wide range of interested parties, including local authorities.

Company Cars

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the aggregate level of subsidy to company car owners for each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 8 June 1992]: The benefit of the private use of a company car is taxed by reference to fixed scale charges. But the value of private use to any particular employee depends on a wide range of factors. Information about these is not available, so it is not possible to provide an estimate of the aggregate extent to which company car owners may be subsidised through the tax treatment of the benefit of a company car.

Railway Costs

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the percentage to total railway costs, including capital costs, which is financed from (a) revenue and (b) investment for each of the EC member states, Sweden, Norway and Finland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 8 June 1992]: I regret that the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the level of Government financial support given to the railways expressed (a) in cash terms and (b) as a percentage of gross domestic product for each of the EC member states, Sweden, Norway and Finland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 8 June 1992]: I regret that the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the level of capital expenditure per train kilometre which is spent on railways in each of the EC member states, Sweden, Norway and Finland, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 8 June 1992]: I regret that the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Company Cars

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the level of subsidy provided per mile to (a) company car owners and (b) rail passengers for each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 8 June 1992]: It is not possible to give an estimate of the subsidy per passenger mile to company car owners.

For rail passengers, the following is the information on subsidy per passenger mile requested:

WALES

Income Support

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) male and (b) female pensioners were dependent on income support in Wales in each year since 1988.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Estimates of those aged 60 years and over and either in receipt of income support or partners of recipients are given in the following table:

Thousands

Claimants and partners	In receipt of weekly payment on 31 May [1]1988	1989	1990
(a) Male	N/a	24	29
(b) Female	N/a	79	81
TOTAL	112	103	110

[1] in 1988 there were 28,000 male and 71,000 female claimants of income support in Wales. Separate figures for male and female partners are not available.

Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiries, 1988, 1989, 1990.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what appointments he has made of chairmen for the training and enterprise councils in Wales; what indication he has given of the length of time to be served by these chairmen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I set eligibility criteria for chairmen of training and enterprise councils, but I do not appoint them. The chairmen are elected by their respective boards for periods which they determine.

Treatment Centres

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, for (a) the treatment centre for ophthalmology at Ysbyty Gwynedd, Bangor, (b) the treatment centre for ophthalmology at Bridgend general hospital, (c) the treatment centre for hernias and varicose veins at Bridgend general hospital and (d) the treatment centre for major joint surgery at the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar, Cardiff, (i) the number of operations contracted by the Welsh Office for the current financial year, (ii) the percentage of (i) that will come from outside the health authority in which the treatment centre is located, (iii) the numbers coming from each health authority where the patients have their residence, separately distinguishing referrals from general practitioners and consultants and (iv) the number of patients who have been referred to date to each centre.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The numbers of operations to be contracted by the Welsh Office in the current financial year are as follows:

Surgical treatment centre Bridgend general hospital—1,000 hernias and varicose veins.

Orthopaedic treatment centre Rhydlafar hospital—255 hip and knee joint replacements and other orthopaedic operations

Ophthalmic treatment centre Ysbyty Gwynedd, Bangor —300 cataracts

Ophthalmic treatment centre Bridgend general hospital —850 cataracts

Activity levels and associated funding at the Bangor treatment centre will be reviewed in November.

The allocation of centrally funded capacity between district health authorities is currently being finalised, based on bids received from the authorities and their waiting list problems. I will write to the hon. Gentleman shortly and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House. The centres are free to negotiate additional contracts with district health authorities should any spare capacity remain.

Comprehensive data on specific sources of referral is not currently available.

The total number of patients treated at each treatment centre from their different start dates to 31 March 1992 is as follows:

Surgical treatment centre
Bridgend general—opened April 1990—1,980 (procedures)
Ophthalmic treatment centre
Bridgend general—opened October 1991—419
Orthopaedic treatment centre
Rhydlafar hospital—opened December 1989—647
Ophthalmic treatment centre
Ysbyty Gwynedd, Bangor—opened July 1990—692

Local Plans

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what action he is intending to take against local authorities which have no local plan in place;

(2) if he will publish those local authorities in Wales which have not yet produced local plans.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The White Paper, "This Common Inheritance", reaffirmed the Government's belief in an effective development plan system and set out proposals for its improvement.

Section 36 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 (as amended) makes preparation of statutory local plans for all areas mandatory and, as indicated in Planning Policy Guidance Note 12 'Development Plans and Strategic Planning Guidance in Wales' (February 1992), my right hon. Friend expects local plan coverage in Wales to be substantially complete within five years.

The new arrangements came into operation on 10 February 1992. No authority has yet completed local plan procedures under the new system.

Welsh Language

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make available in Welsh the 1992 DES leaflets, "How is Your Child Doing at School", and "A Parent's Guide to Tests and Reports for 7 and 14 year olds".

Sir Wyn Roberts: Separate bilingual booklets for Wales have already been published by the Welsh Office. Parents can obtain copies through schools or directly from the Welsh Office Education Department. I have arranged for copies to be made available to all Members of Parliament in Wales.

Physiotherapists

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current numbers of physiotherapists in each health authority in Wales; and what steps are being taken to provide training places to increase those numbers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of physiotherapists employed by health authorities in Wales as at 30 September 1991 was as follows:

	Number	Whole-time equivalent
Clwyd	127	94·4
East Dyfed	53	44·0
Gwent	104	85·3
Gwynedd	72	54·1
Mid Glamorgan	102	85·7
Pembrokeshire	24	20·5
Powys	49	29·7
South Glamorgan	198	155·2

Current staffing levels in this and other staff groups in the NHS in Wales are monitored annually under the manpower resource planning exercise which was initiated in 1987. Forecasts are also made of staffing requirements for the next five years. These data are used to inform decisions on funding training activity, etc., within the various professions.

Physiotherapy has been identified as one of four "shortage professions", along with occupational therapy, speech therapy and clinical psychology. Increased training in these professions has been funded through student sponsorships under arrangements which have operated since 1990-91. Over £100,000 has been allocated to train 12 student physiotherapists.

Other initiatives for remedying these shortages are being examined, including possible overseas recruitment. More generally, recruitment and retention considerations also influenced the Government's decision to accept in full the review body's recommendation for an average 6·4 per cent. increase in the pay of professions allied to medicine from 1 April 1992.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to consult regularly with bodies representing physiotherapists to discuss matters affecting their profession.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office enjoys close links with the various professional bodies which represent both physiotherapists and other health care professions. Consultation with these bodies is routinely undertaken as necessary.

County Council Elections

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has taken such steps as are necessary to cancel or delay the county council elections due to be held in Wales in 1993 in the light of his proposed reorganisation of local government in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave on 5 June 1992 at col. 662.

Recycling

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to introduce a ring-fenced credit approved scheme for local authorities in Wales to encourage investment in waste re-cycling schemes.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We have no proposals to alter the current formula based arrangements for the distribution of local authority capital resources, which are supported by the local authority associations.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the acquisition of alternative feeding grounds for wading birds displaced by the Cardiff bay barrage proposal; what progress he has made in negotiations; and when he expects a conclusion on (a) taking an option on and (b) acquisition of any such land area.

Mr. David Hunt: My officials are continuing constructive discussions with interested parties, including the Countryside Council for Wales and Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, about measures to compensate for the loss of the existing feeding grounds in Cardiff bay. However, it would be premature to estimate the timing of any land acquisition at this stage.

Quarrying

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that the strict control applied to sites of special scientific interest, including ancient woodland, will prevent any destruction by quarrying of Carmel woods in the Gwenlais valley, Dyfed.

Mr. David Hunt: Policy on planning controls over sites of special scientific interest was published most recently in Welsh Office circular 1/92. Any application for planning permission affecting the site mentioned must be determined on its own merits in the light of that policy. However, an application for registration of an old mining permission under schedule 2 to the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 is currently being considered by the Minerals Planning Authority.

Redundancies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state for Wales the number of redundancies by standard industrial classification for the latest available year.

Mr. David Hunt: The provisional figures for the period 1 May 1991 to 30 April 1992 are as follows:

SIC		Number
0:	Agriculture, forestry and fishing	22
1:	Energy and water supply industries	654
2:	Ore/mineral extraction (other than fuels); manufacture of metals, mineral products and chemicals	942
3:	Metal goods, engineering and vehicle industries	3,486
4:	Other manufacturing industries	1,961
5:	Construction	458
6:	Distribution, hotels and catering, repairs	265
7:	Transport and communication	410
8:	Banking, finance, insurance, business services, leasing	183
9:	Other services	1,538
	Total	9,919

Housing Associations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for consultation with the chairman of Tai Cymru to set up an advisory panel with representation from appropriate professional bodies, housing associations and tenant and resident associations to regulate the inflation-related annual increases in the level of service charges by Welsh housing associations.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Garth Angharad Hospital

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of the closure of Garth Angharad hospital on the whole of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Initially, it is for health authorities to assess the implications of individual closure proposals in the light of prevailing circumstances and to consult on any such proposals.

Gwynedd health authority is currently considering the future of Garth Angharad within the local as well as the all-Wales context.

Training Schemes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) men and (b) women in employment received employment training in Wales in the last year for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on numbers of people training under employment training (ET) who have employed status is available on a quarterly basis. The latest information available shows that on 29 March 1992, there were 1,367 people with employed status receiving training under ET in Wales. This information is not collected by gender.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the latest available figures showing the average duration of employment training courses for (a) women and (b) men in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The latest available figures cover the period from July 1990 to June 1991 and show that the average duration of employment training courses in Wales was 29·7 weeks. This information is not collected by gender.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state, by county and for Wales as a whole, the number of people covered by (a) employment training, (b) the enterprise allowance scheme and (c) the youth training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not available in the exact form requested, as it is not collected on a county basis. Figures are compiled by training and enterprise councils (TECs) area, and those for 29 March 1992 are set out in the following table:

TEC	(a) In employment training	(b) In enterprise training	(c) In youth training
Gwent	1,883	403	2,974
Mid Glamorgan	2,419	430	3,600

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what responsibilities his Department has that apply in Scotland; and what responsibilities have been transferred to his Department from the Scottish Office.

Mr. Key: The responsibilities of the Secretary of State for National Heritage that apply in Scotland broadly follow the territorial division of responsibilities which existed before the creation of the Department of National Heritage. Responsibilities of the Secretary of State which extend to Scotland include: sponsorship of the national heritage memorial fund; the work of the advisory committee on historic wreck sites; the Great Britain Sports Council and the international promotion of British sport; British Screen Finance; European co-production fund; Audio Visual Eureka; film certification; the UK Film Commission; the MEDIA programme; the national film and television school; the British Film Institute; the work of the reviewing committee on the export of works of art; broadcasting; the British Library and the performing arts. He liaises closely with the Secretary of State for Scotland on these matters where appropriate.

No responsibilities have been transferred to the Department of National Heritage from the Scottish Office.

National Lottery

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the employment implications of a national lottery, particularly in the Greater Liverpool area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The effect of a national lottery on overall levels of employment is one of the matters which the Government will be considering in the light of the views expressed in response to the White Paper, "A National Lottery, Raising Money for Good Causes", Cm 1861.

Archaeology

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether the effectiveness of the guidance contained in the planning policy guidance note on archaeology and planning—PPG16—which was issued in November 1990 has been reviewed.

Mr. Key: Yes. English Heritage was invited to review the effectiveness of PPG 16 one year after it had been published and commissioned a firm of consultants, Pagoda Projects, to undertake the work. In order to assess the impact of the PPG, consultations were carried out with developers, archaeologists working for or advising planning authorities, archaeologists working for or advising developers and other interested bodies. The report of the review was submitted at the end of January 1992 and a copy has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

I am pleased to report that the consultants' main conclusions are encouraging. They indicate that the advice given in PPG 16 has been adopted by every local planning authority in England, and that the archaeological significance of planning applications is now much more fully considered. The PPG is also starting to produce a more consistent approach to archaeology in the planning process. This, and the greater certainty for developers which results from addressing archaeological issues at an early stage, is beneficial both for developers and for the heritage. In the light of the report's findings we are satisfied that the guidance is proving valuable to all parties who may become involved with archaeology and the planning system.

However, the report indicated some matters which need to be kept under review, including ways of bringing the PPG to the attention of smaller developers. My Department and English Heritage will be following these up with the relevant bodies shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Single Market

Mr. William Powell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the short title of each of the remaining Acts for which European Community member states must take national implementing measures to implement the completion of the single European market, and in each such case the Community member or members which must still take action.

Mr. Needham: Every six months the Commission produces a comprehensive report for the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament on the implementation of White Paper measures for completing the single market. This shows implementation by each member state. The sixth report covering up to 10 December 1991, published in February 1992, is the latest available; a copy is in the Library—document 4527/92 of 19 December 1991; explanatory memorandum 6 March 1992.

BCCI

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 332, if his officials have had any further meetings with the liquidators of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International concerning the convening of a creditors meeting.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 138, what matters he is considering regarding the Renewable Energy Advisory Group; when he expects to complete his consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend and I are considering carefully how the work of the group can be best completed. I will announce our decision on this as soon as possible.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and any agency which reports to his Department in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's memorandum on this subject which was submitted to the Environment Select Committee of this House in the last session. It has now been published by HMSO as part of the Environment Committee's report on coastal zone protection and planning, volume II, minutes of evidence and appendices.

Following changes in Departmental responsibilities since the memorandum was written, the responsibilities and duties of the Department of Energy now fall to my Department.

Coal

Mr. Gallie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Government's intentions with respect to European Community moves towards a European reference price for coal and its implications for the coal industry.

Mr. Eggar: The Commission has put forward preliminary ideas on reference prices for coal as a device to restrain excessive levels of subsidies for coal mining in some member states. There is no suggestion that the Commission intend to subsidise Community coal production so that it is all sold at a reference price level. We support the Commission's aim of reducing unjustifiable subsidies.

Mr. Gallie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list current levels of subsidy given to coal producers within European Community member states.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of subsidy for current coal production in 1990 for relevant European Community member states was as follows:

Belgium	55·19
France	10·99
Germany	39·23
Spain	18·83
United Kingdom	—

Source: European Commission.

European Community policy is to have subsidies for current production by all member states phased out, and the Government fully support this aim.

Astra Holdings plc

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his Department's report on Astra Holdings plc will be completed; and when he will publish it.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I cannot say, although the inspectors are well advanced in their inquiries. A decision on publication will be taken when their report has been received and its contents considered. However, it is the normal practice to publish reports on public companies.

Research

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total research budget of the Department of Energy for each of the past five years; and what is his Department's research budget for the next year on the energy potential of (a) fossil fuels, (b) nuclear fuels and (c) renewable sources of energy.

Mr. Eggar: Total research figures for each of the past five years are as follows:

1987-88	172·3
1988-89	187·3
1989-90	140·3
1990-91	175·9
1991-92	124·2

—1987-88 and 1988-89 figures are taken from the "Annual Review of Government Funded R&D". These figures relate essentially to Frascati R&D and take no account of technology transfer expenditure.

—1989-90 and 1990-91 are final outturn and do include technology transfer expenditure.
—1991-92 figure is taken from Main Supply Estimates and also includes technology transfer expenditure.
—The figures do not include energy efficiency research which is now the responsibility of the Department of the Environment.

The 1992-93 research budget for each of the energy technologies is as follows:

Assisted Areas

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Government will now undertake a review of the assisted areas map; and if there will be a period of public consultation.

Mr. Sainsbury: The assisted areas map was last drawn in 1984. In consultation with the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales, my right hon. Friend and I have decided to review it. The revised map will in due course have to be cleared with the European Commission and I plan to put proposals to it later in the year.

A consultation paper on the arrangements for the review and the criteria which will be taken into account in considering changes to the map has been prepared. I have placed copies in the Library and copies are also available from my Department and the Scottish and Welsh Offices.

The problems and needs of all areas will be carefully considered in the review. There will be a period of public consultation. Local organisations and other bodies wishing to make representations should send these either to the appropriate DTI regional office for areas in England or to the Scottish or Welsh Offices before the end of September 1992.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Government will respond to the recommendations made by the Select Committee for Energy in its second report, 1991-92 on the consequences of electricity privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: The Government welcome the Committee's thorough and wide ranging investigation into the consequences of electricity privatisation. A memorandum, setting out the Government's response to the Committee's recommendations, has been placed in the Library of the House. A further memorandum, setting out the response of the Direct General of Electricity Supply, has also been placed in the Library.

Landward Licensing Round

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will announce the results of the fifth landward licensing round.

Mr. Eggar: I have today announced the conditional award of 26 new exploration licences for blocks in England, Wales and Scotland. The licences allow companies to search and drill for petroleum, subject to the requirements of the planning system and the technical approval of my Department.

Details of the awards have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

I am encouraged by the interest shown in onshore petroleum operations which contributes both to our knowledge of our oil and gas reserves and to their development.

This round was notable for the presence of companies new to the onshore petroleum exploration scene. Onshore exploration can offer significant opportunities to the smaller companies to gain experience in the petroleum business as well as contributing to the general development of the industry.

In 13 of the new licences, the licensees are primarily interested in the potential for the exploitation of methane gas which occurs in and around coal seams. I am very encouraged by this continuing interest. This is a relatively new venture in Great Britain. The first licences to explore the potential for coal bed methane were awarded in the fourth round. Although it is early days yet to make any forecasts on the potential for the exploitation of this resource in the United Kingdom, we remain confident that it could represent a valuable addition to our future energy supplies.

Japanese-owned Companies

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 May, Official Report, column 105, if he will give such information relating to the number of employees and the location of Japanese-owned companies as is available to him.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 June 1992]: The Department of Trade and Industry's invest in Britain bureau (IBB) has information only on Japanese companies manufacturing in the United Kingdom. Copies of the IBB's list of Japanese manufacturing companies in the United Kingdom has been placed in the Library. This gives information on the location of Japanese manufacturers in the United Kingdom and the employment created at the time of the announcement of the project.

British Standards Institution

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the current legal and financial basis of the British Standards Institution; and what charges he expects to be made in it when the single market is complete.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 June 1992]: The British Standards Institution (BSI) is an independent body, incorporated by royal charter. It is not part of Government and its legal basis is therefore not a matter for the Government.

The Government's financial involvement with BSI is limited to a grant contribution, to the income of BSI Standards. The institution also comprises two other operating divisions, BSI quality assurance and BSI testing, which are run on a purely commercial basis without Government grants.

Generating Plants

Mr. Evennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications have been received and are outstanding for the construction of gas-fired power generating plants.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 June 1992]: Thirteen.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many applications have been received and are outstanding for the construction of non-fossil fuel power generating plants;

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's policy concerning the approval of new non-fossil fuel generating plants.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 June 1992]: One application is outstanding. Each application for consent is considered on its merits.

DNA Sequencing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he is giving to the legal position of job and insurance applications, in relation to DNA sequencing; and what consideration he is giving to laws on codes of practice to prevent misuse of information.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 8 June 1992]: DNA screening should be carried out only with the consent of the individual concerned. The results of these tests are subject to the same degree of confidentiality as apply to other personal health information. Such information should not be provided for purposes other than those for which the individual has given consent. The Government are aware of the concern about the potential impact of information gained via genetic screening and are keeping a close watch on developments in human genetics.

The United Kingdom insurance industry does not intend to seek mass screening for genetic information within the foreseeable future, but when individuals have had a specific genetic test as part of their medical treatment these tests may fall into the same category as other medical tests and will need to be declared on proposal forms. It is only by obtaining relevant information and by careful judgment by the underwriters that risks can be properly assessed and premiums appropriate to the risk charged.

With regard to job applications, employers are free to attach whatever conditions they consider appropriate to an offer of employment, including conditions relating to health or medical capability, provided that they do not discriminate unlawfully, for example on grounds of sex or race. The terms on which employers offer jobs and on which applicants accept them are in general a matter for the parties concerned, and it would be neither desirable nor practicable for the Government to intervene.

Hunterprint

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what printing contracts the company Hunterprint had, or has outstanding, for work associated with privatisations by the Department of Trade and Industry or the Department of Energy since 1979; and if he will give the dates and the privatisation in question for each contract.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 June 1992]: Hunterprint has not been the main contract printers for any privatisations by the Department of Trade and Industry or the former Department of Energy. Comprehensive information on minor printing contracts is not held centrally. However, Hunterprint did print two brochures which were part of the electricity privatisation marketing campaign: one on the offer of shares in the regional electricity companies, issued in August 1990, and the second on the offer of shares in the generating companies, issued in November 1990.

Anti-dumping Measures

Mr. Ashton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of current anti-dumping controls in shoe and other fast fashion industries.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 5 June 1992]: It is for the European Commission to assess the effectiveness of anti-dumping measures. In the shoe and fast fashion industries, espadrilles from China are the only goods on which EC anti-dumping remedies are currently in force.

Footwear Industry

Mr. Ashton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will support the EC proposals to apply quotas in value terms on imports of footwear from China from 1 July and demand backing for this from other EC countries.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 5 June 1992]: In common with a number of other member states, the Government have pressed the Commission to present a proper economic case in support of their proposal for an EC-wide quota regime. We shall then weigh the evidence, taking into account not only the United Kingdom footwear industry's support for the measure but also the opposition to it from some United Kingdom importers and retailers.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he intends to take to prevent the unfair dumping of shoes from China into the United Kingdom and the European Community.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 5 June 1992]: It is for the industry concerned in the United Kingdom or elsewhere in the European Community to make a case to the European Commission about alleged dumping of goods from third countries and for the Commission to investigate it. I am not aware of any recent complaints about dumping of shoes from China.

Defence Industry (Decline)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will be submitting an application for funds from the European Commission programme for areas affected by the decline of the defence industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 May 1992]: Applications for grants have been submitted under the European Community PERIFRA programme, which is intended, among other objectives, to aid regions facing major structural change because of arms industry conversion to civil production.

PERIFRA is one of a number of programmes in the 1992 European Commuity budget for which there is no underlying legal authority for expenditure. We place considerable importance on ensuring that the requirements of budget discipline apply to all Community spending, in order to protect the interests of taxpayers.

The United Kingdom intends to continue its dialogue with the Commission, Council colleagues and the European Parliament with a view to ensuring that the treaty and budgetary decisions are respected. In the meantime, applications under PERIFRA will proceed.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Personal Files

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his policy on increasing access by individuals to personal files kept on them by Government Departments.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is already extensive access to computer records under the Data Protection Act 1984 and the Government are willing in principle to extend individuals' access to personal information held on them by Departments where it is practicable and in the public interest to do so.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what responsibilities and duties the Duchy has in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Duchy of Lancaster owns areas of foreshore, tidal rivers and beds of creeks within the boundaries of the County Palatine. The Duchy also owns ponds, lakes and rivers which are not tidal.

The Duchy manages and controls its interests in these areas in the same manner as any other landowner and it is Duchy practice to ensure that any statutory duties are observed.

The Duchy has no responsibility for the sea bed on the seaward side of the line of low tide.

Science (Advisory Structure)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his consultations within the scientific community to see whether changes should be made to the advisory structure.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following the establishment of the Office of Science and Technology, I shall be considering the full range of the office's responsibilities as well as the structures needed to discharge them effectively. I am always ready to listen to the views of the scientific community on the advisory structures as on all other relevant matters.

Toxic Shock Syndrome

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what research is currently being carried out into toxic shock syndrome.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Medical Research Council is the main agency through which the Government support medical research in this country. While not at present supporting any research specifically into toxic shock syndrome, the Medical Research Council is supporting some basic research in staphylococcus which may have some relevance to it. The Medical Research Council is always willing to consider soundly based research proposals in competition with other applications. Information is not collected centrally on relevant publicly funded research which may be being carried out by universities, medical schools or health authorities, nor on research by charities.

Public Bodies

Mr. Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what was the cost of funding public bodies in 1979, 1985, 1990 and currently; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the number of public bodies existing in 1979, 1985, 1990 and currently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: These details are shown in "Public Bodies 1991", published in December 1991. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

SCOTLAND

Sheriff Ewan Stewart

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he will take on the findings of the inquiry into the conduct of Sheriff Ewan Stewart carried out by the Lord President of the Court of Session and the Lord Justice Clerk.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following initial consideration of the report submitted to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by the Lord President of the Court of Session and the Lord Justice Clerk, Sheriff Ewan Stewart was invited to comment on its findings. The conclusions of the report and the sheriff's comments which have now been received are being carefully examined and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce his decision as soon as possible.

Prescriptions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the prescription of (a) evening primrose oil and (b) other homeopathic medicines by the national health service.

Mr. Allan Stewart: One evening primrose oil product is licensed by the licensing authority for the treatment of atopic eczema and is prescribable on the NHS for that purpose. No evening primrose oil preparation has satisfied the licensing requirements of safety and efficacy for any other medical condition.

The Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances advises the Health Departments as to the circumstances in which unlicensed products may be regarded as drugs and has considered the unlicensed evening primrose oil products, which are generally regarded as food supplements, but has not been satisfied that they have any therapeutic use. They have therefore been prohibited for prescription on the NHS. Evening primrose oil is not a homeopathic medicine.

The use of homeopathic treatments is a matter for decision by individual doctors. Doctors in contract with the national health service can provide these treatments for their patients in the same way as with allopathic medicines.

Argyll and Clyde Health Board

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) name, (b) city, town or village of residence and (c) occupation of the chairman, vice-chairman and each member of Argyll and Clyde health board.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The latest information known to us is as follows:

Name	Position	Area of Residence	Occupation
Mr. R. R. Reid	Chairman	Rothesay	Farmer
Dr. J. Moffat	Non-executive member (vice chairman)	Greenock	Retired consultant psychiatrist
Mr. N. M. Faccenda	Non-executive member	Connel	Business man
Mrs. M. A. Foggie	Non-executive member	Greenock	Housewife, former solicitor
Mrs. E. S. Lander	Non-executive member	Kilmacolm	Company director
Mrs. J. C. Le Roux	Non-executive member	Dunoon	Housewife
Mr. C. H. Parker	Non-executive member	Kilmacolm	Company managing director
Mr. K. Brewer	Executive member	Paisley	Director of finance
Dr. A. A. Reid	Executive member	Glasgow	Director of public health
Mr. I. C. Smith	Executive member	Barrhead	General manager

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to make appointments to or dismissals from the membership of Argyll and Clyde health board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend expects to make appointments early in 1993 to fill vacancies which will arise on 31 March 1993 in the membership of Argyll and Clyde health board. Appropriate consultation will be carried out before the appointments are made.

Credit Unions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the development of the credit union movement in Scotland.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

Based on the annual returns from credit unions to the Registry of Friendly Societies, there were 57 credit unions in Scotland at the end of 1990 with aggregate assets of £5,051,000, equivalent to nearly 30 per cent. of the total assets of the movement in Great Britain. Those 57 unions together had over 19,000 members, representing 35 per cent. of the total in Great Britain. Currently, there are 70 Scottish unions on the register which represent 20 per cent. of the total number of credit unions in Great Britain.

Woodlands

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about changes affecting the area of ancient semi-natural woodland since 1962.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The Government's broadleaves policy and the changes introduced in 1984 to the criteria for granting felling licences and in 1985 to the volume of timber which may be felled without a licence have done much to slow the decline of ancient semi-natural woodland in Scotland. Further measures to remove the remaining causes of decline are being considered.

The Government have also introduced measures to encourage the management of existing ancient semi-natural woodlands and the creation of new native woodlands. Early indications are that these measures are proving a success.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to double the planting of native broadleaf species in those counties which have lost more than one third of their ancient woodland since 1930.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 June 1992]: The area of broadleaves planted in Britain has quadrupled over the last decade. Some 7,500 hectares of broadleaves have, on average, been planted each year during the last five years, as compared with an average of 1,800 hectares during the previous seven years. Nearly all the planting was carried out with native species.

The Government's policy is that there should be a continuing expansion of the area of native woodland in Britain.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 369, he will make a statement about the number of hectares of non-native species and native broadleaf species that have been planted in each year since 1984.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 June 1992]: Information in this detail is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make extra money for out-of-school care available to LECs in Scotland on the same basis as to training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 8 June 1992]: Our manifesto made it clear that we would introduce a new grant to help employers, voluntary groups or schools to set up after-school care and holiday arrangements for the children of working mothers and that this would be paid through local enterprise companies. We shall take the need to resource such grants into account in our planning of future public expenditure provision for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of members of disability appeal tribunals are also members of social security appeal tribunals.

Mr. Scott: Responsibility for the recruitment of people to serve as members of disability appeal tribunals lies with the president of the Independent Tribunals Service, his honour Judge Holden, and the hon. Member may wish to contact his office direct to obtain this information.

Young Persons (Benefit)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what benefits are available to a young person with a permanent home who is not on a youth training scheme.

Mr. Burt: Young people may be entitled to the following benefits subject to meeting the qualifying conditions:

Non-contributory Benefits
Child Benefit
Community Charge Benefit
Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit
Disability Living Allowance
Disability Working Allowance
Family Credit
Guardian's Allowance
Housing Benefit
Income Support
Invalid Care Allowance
One Parent Benefit
Severe Disablement Allowance

Resettlement

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last met the chief executive of the Resettlement Agency; and what was the result of the meeting.

Miss Widdecombe: I have met the chief executive on many occasions to discuss the whole range of the agency's business. The last occasion was on 5 March 1992. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, expects to meet the chief executive in the near future.

National Insurance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances it may be necessary for persons in receipt of income support to pay class 3 national insurance contributions in order to protect their future pension rights; and whether he will amend the income support regulations to enable such contributions to be taken into account in assessing their benefit entitlement.

Mr. Burt: Many people receiving income support have national insurance contributions credited to their account in order to protect their future pension rights, for example, where they are receiving a contributory social security benefit or they are registered as unemployed. Others may have their pension rights protected by home responsibility protection (HRP) which applies to people who are unable to work regularly because they are required to stay at home to look after a child or sick or disabled person.

Where there is no entitlement to credits or HRP and any earnings from part-time employment are below the lower earnings limit at which liability for class 1 contributions commences, people may choose to pay voluntary class 3 contributions to the level required to make a tax year a qualifying one for pension purposes.

There are no plans to change the income support regulations to take such payments into account.

Industrial Injuries Advisory Council

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he received the report of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council on work-related upper limb disorders; and how soon he will act upon the findings.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight) on 21 May at column 241.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time taken to determine an application for the disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested.

Residential Care

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will distinguish the living support, housing and care elements in income support for residential care; what studies he has undertaken to distinguish these elements; and whether he will place the results of these studies in the Library.

Mr. Burt: The income support limits do not include separate amounts for specific items of expenditure.

Social Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the percentage of (a) budgeting loans and (b) community care grants which were awarded to each of the 15 client groups defined by his Department for the Doncaster area; and what were the comparable national figures for the financial years (i) 1989-90, (ii) 1990-91, (iii) 1991-92 and (iv) 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Community Care Grants

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what revision of priorities he has undertaken in respect of those claiming social fund community care grants.

Mr. Scott: The Secretary of State's and local guidance on priorities regarding community care grants is kept under regular review; any necessary adjustments are published in the "Social Fund Officer's Guide"; up to date copies of the guide are available in the Library.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the 1991-92 allocation for social fund community care grants, benefit agency by benefit agency, and the allocation for 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is available in the Library.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give as a percentage figure the budget increase for 1992-93 over 1991-92 for social fund community care grant allocations and the percentage increase in the number of claimants for the social fund community care grant for 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: Figures on social fund applicants are not available in the precise form requested; but information concerning budget allocations and the number of community care grant applications is available in the Library.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the social fund community care grant to meet the needs of claimants in Stoke on Trent; what targets have been set; and if he will give a breakdown of the levels of outstanding claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for 1991-92 in respect of the Stoke on Trent benefits agency in percentage terms the numbers of (i) homeless and (ii) other categories of claimant who (a) qualified for social fund community care grants and (b) received social fund community care grants.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the objectives which the social fund community care grants are required to meet and list those client groups entitled to social fund community care grants.

Mr. Scott: The objectives of community care grants are set out in the Secretary of State's directions, and guidance on their interpretation is set out in the "Social Fund Officer's Guide", copies of which are available in the Library. This includes details of client groups.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will assess the implications for those seeking a social fund community care grant of his decision to limit the budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Research into the operation of the fund, including community care grants, has already been commissioned from the social policy research unit of York university and is due to be published shortly. We will be looking at the results carefully.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the rate of interest to be charged on national insurance contributions underpaid under SI 1992 No. 632; and what publicity he has given to small businesses about these new penalties.

Miss Widdecombe: Interest on late paid national insurance contributions will be charged at the same rate as that charged by the Inland Revenue on late paid tax (currently 10 per cent.). The charges will apply from 19 April 1993 in respect of payments due in the 1992-93 tax year; they are being publicised by the Inland Revenue, and will be explained in DSS guidance to employers.

Expatriate Pensioners

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to pay expatriate pensioners living in Commonwealth countries their full qualified and annually adjusted pensions, on the same basis as paid to expatriate pensioners living in European Community countries.

Miss Widdecombe: United Kingdom pensioners living in the following Commonwealth countries receive annual uprating increases to their state retirement and widows pensions: Barbados, Cyprus, Jamaica, Malta and Mauritius. We have no plans to extend payment of such increases to pensioners living in other Commonwealth countries.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to provide entitlement to additional income support for parents with children subject to residence orders under the Children Act 1989, comparable with the entitlement applying under care orders prior to the enactment of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Burt: A parent who receives child benefit for a child who is the subject of a residence order, is already entitled to the child personal allowance in any calculation of income support.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the rights to claim income support and other benefits in addition to the basic single person's allowance, for those parents who are separated from their children by a residence order under the provisions of the Children Act 1989, but are subsequently given access rights to their children by court order for parts of the day or week, including (a) overnight stays and (b) shorter periods.

Mr. Burt: Under the income support scheme child personal allowances are payable to the parent who is adjudged to have primary responsibility for the child. We have no plans for change.

Students

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was paid to students in the 1991 summer vacation following the decision to restore 10 per cent. of access funding to students facing hardship; what plans he has to take similar steps this year; how much was saved by his Department over the past year following the abolition of benefits previously paid to students; how much has been allocated in 1992 for access funds; how many claimants previously qualifed for and claimed benefits; and how many are in receipt of access funds.

Mr. Burt: Changes to the benefit arrangements for students were introduced alongside the enhanced support available through the educational maintenance system.

The reduction in expenditure on income support and housing benefit was estimated to be £91 million for the 1990-91 academic year.

There were some 135,000 claims for income support from students during the summer vacation in 1989, the most recent date for which information is available. Data for August 1990 indicate that 19,000 students were in receipt of housing benefit during the summer vacation immediately before the benefit changes were introduced.

Matters relating to access funds are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

16. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions she has had with TEC chairmen about adequate funding for TECs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has already met TEC chairmen on a number of occasions and will do so on a regular basis. The purpose of those meetings is to ensure that TECs continue to play an effective part in meeting our training and enterprise objectives.

Durham TEC

17. Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what level of funding has been made available to Durham training and enterprise council this year compared to the last financial year for delivering employment training and youth training programmes.

Mr. McLoughlin: County Durham TEC's budgets for 1992-93 are £12,986,767 for YT and £16,731,143 for ET. This compares to £15,719,999 and £20,808,873 respectively for 1991-92.

Unemployment

18. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she next plans to meet her European counterparts to discuss unemployment in the EC.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I shall next be meeting European Community Employment Ministers at the Social Affairs Council later this month. Whenever I meet my counterparts I emphasise to them the importance of avoiding action which will cost jobs in the Community. The promotion of employment growth, enterprise and help for unemployed people will be a top priority for the United Kingdom Presidency.

Essex TEC

19. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the performance of the Essex TEC.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Last year Essex TEC provided a total of 4,585 places in youth training, 3,588 in employment training, and 424 people participated in the business start-up programme.

Health and Safety Inspectors

20. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current number of health and safety inspectors currently employed; and what is the current number of vacancies.

Mr. McLoughlin: On 1 May 1992, there were 1,491 inspectors in post in the Health and Safety Executive. HSE aims to have a further 101 inspectors in post by 1 April 1993.

Labour Statistics

21. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in unemployment in the United Kingdom in the past 12 months.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the 12 months to April 1992, seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment in the United Kingdom, rose by 528,700 or 24 per cent.

27. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her current estimate of the total of people who are engaged in more than one job and thus counted more than once in the employment totals.

Mr. McLoughlin: Precise information on the number of people with more than one job included in the published work force in employment estimates is not available.

However, the labour force survey estimated that 737,000 people held a second job as an employee in the spring of 1991.

Inner-city Unemployment

22. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what help is offered to the unemployed in inner-city areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department, through the Employment Service and the network of training and enterprise councils, currently offers unemployed people a wider range of help than ever before in finding jobs or gaining the skills they need to compete for jobs. Many of our programmes are focused on long-term unemployed people and are, therefore, of particular benefit to inner city areas. We have sought to ensure that inner city residents and people from the ethnic minorities have access to these programmes by employing many specialists and outreach staff and by publishing literature in a number of minority languages. Training opportunities and jobs are one of the central features of the city challenge programme.

Engineering Skills

23. Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for employment what plans she has for increasing the number of training places available in Stockport for young people to learn engineering skills.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government have given training and enterprise councils the responsibility and resources to plan and deliver training which is most appropriate to meet local needs.

The Stockport area is covered by Stockport and High Peak training and enterprise council and we are satisfied that it has adequate training places available for the young people in its area who wish to enter the engineering industry.

In addition the training and enterprise council plans to increase its engineering provision with the introduction of a new course leading to the achievement of a national vocational qualification level three in two years.

Industrial Action

24. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many working days were lost due to industrial action in (a) 1979, (b) 1991 and (c) the last 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There were just 0·7 million working days lost through industrial action in the 12 months to March 1992, the latest available period, and 0·8 million working days lost in the whole of 1991. These compare with 29 million working days lost in 1979.

Equal Opportunities

25. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will make a statement on the Government's policy concerning achieving equality of outcome in employment for minority groups.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government are fully committed to ensuring equality of opportunity in the labour market for all.

The Department takes every opportunity to encourage employers to recognise the value—to themselves as well as to the community—of sound equal opportunities policies and practices in the workplace, and where necessary to provide practical help and advice. A recent example is the Department's 10-point plan pack for employers. Offering practical guidance on the developlment of appropriate policies, the pack underlines the message that the pursuit of equal opportunities is not only in the interests of minority groups. It also makes good business sense for employers to make the best possible use of all the human resources available to them.

The Government's commitment to equal opportunities in employment is also applied through training and enterprise councils and the Employment Service, in the delivery of their programmes and services and by the Government as an employer itself.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will name the members of the small high level working group which will advise her on issues relevant to women's opportunities in the workplace and beyond.

Mr. McLoughlin: The first members are as follows:

LADY HOWE
Chairman
Business in the Community's Women's Economic Development Team.

Responsible for Opportunity 2000 (and former Deputy Chairman Equal Opportunities Commission).

Working Time Directive

26. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made on the matter of the working time directive; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am determined through constructive discussions with our Community partners to continue to protect employers and employees in the United Kingdom against arbitrary and unnecessary restrictions.

Training Schemes

28. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds in the Sheffield area are not at present on youth training programmes.

Mr. McLoughlin: Exact figures are not available, but I understand that the Sheffield TEC considers that the YT guarantee is being met.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what circumstances citizens from other European Community countries may participate in youth or employment training or in other employment and training schemes financed by the Employment Department; once having entered a programme whether they are entitled to complete it; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Non-United Kingdom European Community nationals are generally eligible to participate in the full range of employment and training services and programmes funded by the Employment Department through the Employment Service and training and enterprise councils. This is conditional, however, on their meeting the relevant eligibility criteria for the programmes and services in question which apply to United Kingdom nationals. Having entered a programme, non-United Kingdom European Community nationals have a full entitlement to complete it.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are currently on youth training schemes; what were the numbers in comparable schemes five, 10 and 15 years ago; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest estimates for the number of young people on YT or receiving training credits is 295,800 at March 1992. Before 1978-79, Government-sponsored schemes were not aimed specifically at providing training for young people comparable with YTS/YT and thus there are no separate figures for 15 years ago. The table gives the number of young people for the other periods asked for.

Young people on Government sponsored schemes in Great Britain

Notes: [1] YOP was initially set up to provide work experience opportunities, training formed only a small part of some of the YOP programmes. The numbers are estimates only.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she expects to be the earliest opportunity for the introduction of legislation to enable appropriate additional jurisdiction to be conferred on industrial tribunals.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment expects to make provision to extend the jurisdiction of industrial tribunals in a Bill that she will be presenting in the current session of Parliament.

Teesside TEC

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the firms and training organisations to which the Teesside TEC has overpaid grants in the last financial year.

Mr. McLoughlin: Contracts between TECs and their training providers are confidential matters for the parties involved. I am unable, therefore, to disclose the information requested.

Health and Safety

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will introduce legislation to reduce or to remove Crown immunity against prosecutions for offences under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974.

Mr. McLoughlin: The citizens charter recognised that Government activities should not be immune from inspection and enforcement on matters such as health and safety regulations. The Crown is already required to comply with the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, and the relevant statutory provisions. Crown bodies are inspected to that end, and there is provision for a Crown notice procedure. The Crown remains immune from criminal prosecution and there are no plans to change that position. However, the adequacy of the current Crown notice procedure is under review, in line with the principles outlined in the citizens charter.

EC Social Proposals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the experts her Department consults on European Community proposals pertaining to social matters.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment consults widely on European Community proposals in the employment and social field. Employers and their organisations, professional associations and other interested bodies, trades unions and specialists are consulted as appropriate. The precise list of consultees depends on the nature of the proposal in question. In matters relating to health and safety at work, the Secretary of State is advised by the Health and Safety Commission.

Interwork Programme

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give the allocation for 1991-92 and 1992-93 for the interwork programme; how many disabled people were budgeted for under this programme in 1991-92 and for 1992-93; and of those how many disabled people are benefiting from the programme in Stoke on Trent.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Social Charter

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she expects to meet her EC colleagues to discuss developments relating to the social charter.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment will be meeting European Community ministers later this month at the Social Affairs Council when a number of proposals from the European Commission's social action programme are due to be discussed.

Working Hours

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has for the introduction of maximum weekly working hours in compliance with the draft European Community directive; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government see no justification for general and compulsory limits on the working week. Negotiations are continuing on the European Community proposals on working hours to seek to protect employers and employees in the United Kingdom from arbitrary and unnecessary restrictions.

Women Workers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she has any plans to improve the treatment of women at work.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Within the new machinery of government changes that I announced on 20 May, I shall be seeking to identify particular areas where further action would be appropriate to help advance women's opportunities at work.

ENVIRONMENT

New Policies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by date, any new policies he has announced since his appointment in either media interviews or at other public events.

Mr. Howard: Since my appointment, and before it became possible to make announcements to the House, I announced the following new policies by way of press announcements: the provision of up to $1 million to help rescue the non-governmental organisations' Global Forum taking place in Rio this month—press notice 295, dated 3 May; a 25 per cent. increase in recycling investment—press notice 283, dated 27 April; the United Kingdom's signature of the agreement to protect small cetaceans in the North and Baltic seas—press notice 298, dated 5 May.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support is currently offered by the Government to assist lower income countries to introduce substitutes for chemicals, eliminated by the revised Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply. The Government have offered a contribution of up to $15 million to the Montreal protocol funding mechanism to assist developing country parties to the protocol comply with its controls.

Building Design

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to offer guidelines to building designers to ensure that buildings designed for public use take women's safety needs fully into account.

Mr. Baldry: No. Where it is considered appropriate my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State can make regulations with respect to building design with the aim of securing the safety of persons in or about buildings.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take measures to ban the transportation of all toxic and radioactive waste to and from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Negotiations are in progress on a draft EC Regulation on the supervision and control of shipments of waste within, into and out of the European Community. The Regulation will enable the United Kingdom to ratify the UNEP Basel convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal. The Government believe that all developed countries should become self-sufficient in final disposal of waste, and is pressing for the regulation to include controls to that effect. The Government consider that imports of hazardous waste should continue from developing countries which are unable to deal safely with such waste. Under the current draft of the regulation no exports for final disposal would be allowed from the Community, except to EFTA countries. The Government also consider that international movements of waste for recovery should continue subject to appropriate environmental controls, such as those included in the recent OECD Decision on this subject.

No radioactive waste is imported into the United Kingdom. Spent nuclear fuel is imported but this is a resource which can be reprocessed. Since 1976, British Nuclear Fuels Limited's contracts have contained options for the return of wastes arising from reprocessing nuclear fuel. The Government intend that reprocessing contracts with overseas customers should continue to contain such options, and that these options will be exercised and wastes returned.

Earth Summit

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list (a) the number of officials by rank and grade and (b) the number of consultants attending the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro, giving details of their class of travel and the total budgeted cost of the delegation.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom delegation will consist of the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for the Environment, the Minister for Overseas Development, myself, and 25 officials from DOE, FCO, ODA, DTI, and the Forestry Commission. Official gradings are:

	Number
Senior grade	8
Counsellor/equivalent	5
First secretary/equivalent	11
Third secretary	1

In addition, there are five members of the delegation attached to our diplomatic posts in Brazil. Their gradings are:

	Number
Senior grade	1
Counsellor	1
First secretary	1
Second secretary	2

Eight junior support staff will also attend the conference, as well as 12 NGO observers who will form part of the United Kingdom delegation.

The staff involved will be needed to service not only the plenary sessions of the conference but also the specialised sectoral working groups that will be set up and where much of the detailed negotiating will be done. So far eight informal working groups have been convened and others will be assembled if necessary. Other staff are required to provide office support facilities and to liaise wih the local authorities over such matters as transport and security.

Ministers, their private secretaries and the ambassadors to the United Nations and to Brazil will travel first class; all other delegates will travel club class. The estimated cost of the delegation's travel and subsistence, including hotel costs will be about £190,000. NGOs will be responsible for their own travel and accommodation expenses.

The estimated total administrative cost of the conference, inlcuding office facilities, transport and communications will be about £500,000.

Water Supplies

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the approximate percentage of potable public water supplies in England and Wales leaving service reservoirs which is used for (a) industrial or manufacturing processes, (b) non-domestic cleaning, (c) personal washing and domestic cleansing, including clothes, (d) domestic and public water closets, (e) garden watering, (f) wastage and (g) any other major category of use.

Mr. Maclean: We shall include the best obtainable information on the subject in the consultation paper on water conservation which my right hon. Friend has said he will publish shortly. The statistics readily available do not use the same set of categories as the hon. Member has listed.

Bathing Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the National Rivers Authority will continue its sampling for salmonella and viruses of designated bathing beaches during the current bathing season.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that the National Rivers Authority will monitor for salmonella at all identified bathing waters and for enteroviruses at bathing waters which failed the coliform standards last season.

Environmental Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by his Department in the implementation of the recommendations of the international environmental education programme.

Mr. Maclean: As non-members of UNESCO we have no plans to make a contribution to this programme. This Government's commitment to environmental education was set out in the Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" published in 1990 and in subsequent follow up reports.

Mortgage Arrears

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households are in arrears with mortgages by six months or more (a) now, (b) a year ago and (c) two years ago.

Mr. Baldry: Annual information on mortgage arrears for the years 1980-91 is published in the May issue of the Council of Mortgage Lenders' quarterly publication, "Housing Finance", which is held in the House of Commons Library.

Relocation

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of requests from the different regions of the United Kingdom offering locations for redeployed civil servants from Marsham street.

Mr. Howard: Since the announcement by my predecessor on 6 February that No. 2 Marsham street was to be demolished, my Department has received representations on behalf of Nottinghamshire, Pembrokeshire, Plymouth, Sheffield, Tyne and Wear, York and the Wirral. The Department of Transport, who also occupy No. 2 Marsham street, have received approaches in respect of east Kent, Nottinghamshire and York.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the criteria on which he based the decision to relocate civil servants from his Department to Canary Wharf.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the criteria (a) previously used and (b) proposed to be used by his Department in assessing the value for money of alternative locations for the staff he proposes to move from Marsham street.

Mr. Howard: I have decided to move staff of my Department to Docklands; Canary Wharf is only one of the properties being considered. The posts which are being relocated need to remain within London because they carry out work which requires regular contact with Ministers. I have decided on a move to Docklands because the advice I have received is that the best value for money which is currently available is to be found there. Some 2,000 posts will relocate to Docklands, provided that we secure fully commercial terms giving value for money to the taxpayer. In deciding between properties in Docklands I shall consider non-financial factors (such as the quality of the working environment; the efficiency, accessibility and environmental standards of the buildings; and the convenience and safety of staff) as well as financial ones.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future location of the 3,000 civil servants from his Department who are not to be transferred to Canary Wharf.

Mr. Howard: I have decided to move staff of my Department to docklands; Canary Wharf is only one of the properties being considered. Other staff will continue to be located elsewhere in London, including Westminster, or in their existing locations outside. A large number of posts have already been moved out of London over recent years, and some 40 per cent. of my staff now work outside London. Those who remain in the capital are those with a need for regular contact with Ministers.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to publish the full terms of any lease taken on premises in docklands to accommodate staff of his Department moved from Marsham street.

Mr. Baldry: No. Any lease taken for premises in docklands will be the result of a commercial negotiation and as such will be confidential to the Department and the developer concerned in accordance with long-established policy in these matters.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to bus in staff relocated to docklands.

Mr. Howard: I have undertaken to put in place arrangements to help to minimise the effects of a move to docklands on the staff of my Department. The details have yet to be settled.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current estimate of redundancies arising from the demolition of the Marsham street offices and the relocation in docklands.

Mr. Howard: Staff in non-mobile grades who choose not to move to docklands will be eligible for redundancy.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the office rentals available in docklands in the first (a) five, (b) 10 and (c) 20 years compared with those available in (i) Sheffield and (ii) elsewhere outside London.

Mr. Baldry: Current rents and terms now on offer in docklands compare favourably with other parts of the United Kingdom.

The possibility of the large rental increases in the future has been foreseen and my officials are considering how best that risk can be minimised in the negotiations referred to in the Secretary of State's statement of 2 June on this matter.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the alternative sites he considered as possible locations for staff to be transferred from Marsham street; and if he will give the reasons in each case why such sites have been rejected.

Mr. Howard: My Department's advisers identified four locations as best meeting the Department's needs for relocation within London, all of them in docklands. I have ruled out one of those four, Thomas More square, Wapping, because it is very much more expensive than the other three. Three—Harbour Exchange, Canary Wharf and East India Dock—remain under consideration.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of office sites in Sheffield as a potential destination for staff relocated from Marsham street; and if he will list the criteria which caused a site in docklands to be preferred.

Mr. Howard: The staff of my Department who are to be relocated to docklands need to be in London because they need to have regular contacts with Ministers. The question of assessing sites in Sheffield does not arise.

Drought

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure the continuity of water supply in times of drought.

Mr. Maclean: Primary responsibility for maintaining public water supplies rests with the water companies. The National Rivers Authority (NRA) also have a general statutory responsibility for conserving, redistributing and augmenting water resources and securing their proper use. My Department has for some months been holding regular meetings with the NRA, the Office of Water Services and the water companies to ensure necessary liaison and that we are aware of action (such as the consideration of applications for drought orders) that will be needed by the Department.

I have written to all Members of Parliament, including my hon. Friend, in the areas which may be affected by water shortages this summer to explain the situation in greater detail. My right hon. Friend proposes to issue a consultation paper on water conservation shortly.

Methane

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much is currently being allocated by his Department to research institutions to develop ways of reducing methane emissions.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has responsibility for controlling methane emissions from landfill sites. Currently we are funding projects on the design of landfill gas flaring systems and on optimising methane oxidation in landfill cover soils. These projects have a total value of £200,000.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been allocated by his Department for the forthcoming year to undertake publicity campaigns to promote more efficient energy use in homes, offices, industry and transport.

Mr. Maclean: The Department has allocated £6·3 million for publicity and information promotion on energy efficiency during 1992-93.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown of sums allocated to cover the cost of enterprise zones (a) by individual enterprise zone, (b) in total for the United Kingdom and (c) including sums which would have accrued from changes in rateable values or increases in capital values over the period of the life of the enterprise zone.

Mr. Redwood: The table shows outturn costs for rate revenue forgone in United Kingdom enterprise zones up to 31 March 1990. No comparable figures are available for other enterprise zone allowances.

Water Meters

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on increasing the use of water meters.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on 2 June 1992 to my hon. Friend the Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) Official Report, column 383.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information the Office of Water Services has on how many water meters are installed in each water authority area.

Mr. Maclean: About 0·5 million domestic properties and 1·1 million commercial and industrial properties in England and Wales receive water on a metered supply. Details of the number of metered properties in each water company area are contained in OFWAT publication entitled "The UK Water Industry—Charges for water services 1992-93", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information OFWAT has on what changes in the consumption of water have been brought about where water meters have been installed.

Mr. Maclean: Information from the national water metering trials funded by DOE and the water industry indicates that in the large scale Isle of Wight trial the amount of water put into supply has fallen by 11·1 per cent., of which it is estimated that 5·9 per cent. was the result of reductions in leakage. In the small scale trials demand has reduced on average by 13·1 per cent. although the effect in individual trials ranged from −29·6 per cent. to +2·3 per cent. In these trials, it is estimated that reductions in leakage accounted for 5·1 per cent. of the average reduction.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment OFWAT has made of whether average water bills have increased or decreased in areas where water meters have been introduced.

Mr. Maclean: Information from the national water metering trial areas indicates that about 65 per cent. of customers paid the same as or less than they would have paid on a rateable value basis. About 20 per cent. of customers paid over 20 per cent. more.

National Water Grid

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has plans to establish a national water grid.

Mr. Maclean: Bulk supplies of water are already transferred over considerable distances in a number of cases. The National Rivers Authority (NRA) considers further possible schemes in its consultation paper "Water Resources Development Strategy" published in March. It will be for the National Rivers Authority and the water companies to decide whether they believe any such scheme should be promoted.

Incinerators

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the current statutory regulations used by Her Majesty's inspectorate of Pollution in respect of waste or sewage incinerators both individually and severally; and what are the comparable standards adopted by France, Germany, the Netherlands and Belgium, respectively.

Mr. Maclean: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) controls those processes involving the incineration of waste or sewage sludge which are described in "The Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulations 1991 (SI 472) and The Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) (Amendment) Regulations 1991 (SI 614) issued under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. These require each process to be individually authorised and for the best available technologies not entailing excessive cost to be used by the operator to prevent or reduce emissions from the process.

To provide guidance on the standards to be applied, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution issues guidance notes to its inspectors relating to the processes it controls. These provide a sound framework within which Inspectors can assess applications for the authorisation of new processes and existing processes. The notes are also publicly available for the benefit of operators and other interested parties.

I recently announced (Official Report, 21 May, column 197), the publication of those notes relating to processes in the waste disposal and recycling sector which includes these three incineration processes.

I will write to the hon. Member about the question of how the standards applied in England and Wales compare with those of the four countries cited.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the incentives currently available to encourage the development of more energy-efficient processes and vehicles by industry.

Mr. Maclean: The energy efficiency office promotes detailed technical and economic advice to industry on energy efficient processes through its best practice. The EEO also supports consultancy help in the management of energy efficiency investments in smaller industrial companies.

Energy efficiency in transport is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport to a question by the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 2 June at column 522.

Rents-to-Mortgages Scheme

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average value of properties sold to tenants under the pilot rents-to-mortgages schemes in Basildon and Milton Keynes; what was the average initial payment made by tenants under the schemes; and what proportion of sales have been flats.

Mr. Baldry: Most of the houses sold in Milton Keynes were worth £40,000 to £50,000; in Basildon, most were worth over £50,000. Information on the initial payment made is at present available only for Milton Keynes, where more than half the tenants paid between £15,000 and £20,000. Four out of the 103 properties sold have been flats.

North Tyneside (Urban Programme)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state for each year since its inception the amount of funding under the urban programme allocated to the North Tyneside area at (a) cash prices and (b) 1991-92 prices.

Mr. Squire: Figures for urban programme allocations to North Tyneside are only available in the Department from 1979-80 when the programme was transferred from the Home Office. The information is as follows:

Traffic, Greenwich

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken by his Department to measure the extent of atomospheric pollution attributable to emissions from motor vehicles in the Greenwich area; and what information is available on this matter.

Mr. Maclean: My Department commissioned a study of nitrogen dioxide levels throughout the United Kingdom using diffusion tubes during 1991. As part of this survey, levels of this pollutant of which the major source is motor traffic were measured in the Greenwich area. The report of this study was published last month by Warren Spring laboratory and is available in the Library of the House.

Black smoke concentrations have been rising over the last few years in the Greenwich area. This increase is thought to be due to increasing particulate emissions from diesel vehicles in the locality.

Mineral Planning Authority

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of state for the Environment who are the members of the mineral planning authority covering the Kirklees area; when they were appointed to this authority; and by whom.

Mr. Baldry: I regret that this information is not held by the Department.

Hunterprint

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what printing contracts the company Hunterprint had, or has outstanding with his Department related to (a) water privatisation and (b) any other matters; and if he will give the dates and details of the nature and the subject matter of the printed material for each contract.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 5 June 1992]: The company Hunterprint was contracted by my Department, following competitive tender, to print the flotation brochure included in the information pack for the launch of the sale of the water companies of England and Wales in 1989. Some 3 million copies were produced in English and 250,000 copies in Welsh.

No other contracts with this firm are recorded.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent applications his Department has received from the Australian Government supporting the plans of the Australian companies Carpentaria and Brambles, Australia, respectively, to import toxic waste into the United Kingdom from Australia for treatment; and what response has been made.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 5 June 1992]: The Australian Department of the Arts, Sport, the Environment and Territories has written to my Department to seek a bilateral agreement under article 11 of the United Nations Environment Programme Basle convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal. This would allow Australia to ship such waste to the United Kingdom for disposal. I have decided not to agree to the request, and we are replying accordingly.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, columns 369-70, whether sites of special scientific interest will, in future, be protected from any depradation by agriculture, quarrying or any other activity.

Mr. Maclean: [holding answer 9 June 1992]: Development proposals in or near sites of special scientific interest are strictly controlled either through the measures set out in the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, as amended, or the planning system.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of the branches of the local government finance policy division of his Department (a) the total number of staff, analysed by grade, (b) the total salary costs, (c) the policy responsibilities and (d) the measurements of policy outcomes used to appraise the branch for the purposes of MINIS and the branch's achievements in the most recent MINIS report.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 8 June 1992]: The information is as follows:

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the regulations still to be made under the Local Government Finance Act 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how the capping criteria for Cheltenham borough council and Gloucester city council for 1992-93 were adjusted to take into account the misallocation of grant to these councils in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what account was taken of boundary changes in fixing grant allocations to local authorities in Gloucestershire for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will visit Cheltenham to discuss his 1992-93 grant allocation with councillors and other residents' representatives.

Mr. Squire [holding answer 8 June 1992]: The boundary changes affecting Gloucestershire districts occurred too late to be taken into account in 1991-92 standard spending assessments and hence in revenue support grant distribution. Instead, compensating payments were made between the authorities concerned.

Allowance is made for these boundary changes in the 1992-93 SSAs in accordance with the procedure set out in paragraph 12 of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) (No. 2) Report (England), which was approved by the House of Commons on 4 February 1992. In the circumstances, I believe that it would not be appropriate to visit Cheltenham to discuss the 1992-93 RSG distribution.

SSAs are central to the capping criteria for 1992-93; hence we consider the criteria we have adopted make appropriate allowance for the effect of the boundary changes.

Gloucester's total SSA for 1992-93 is 13·1 per cent. higher than for 1991-92. That of Cheltenham is 16·7 per cent. higher. These increases in large part reflect the boundary changes.

HEALTH

Residential Care

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the Government's plans on implementation of the findings of (a) the Howe inquiry and (b) the report by Sir William Utting.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave her on 5 June at column 670. Implementation of the recommendations in Sir William Utting's report is being coordinated by a group chaired by the Department and including local authority, professional, voluntary sector and other Government Department interests.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on those recommendations of the Howe inquiry which give an emphasis on training; and what assessment she has made of the inclusion in the diploma in social work course of enhanced training specifically on residential care.

Dr. Mawhinney: We shall be giving careful consideration to all the recommendations of the Howe inquiry which are relevant to our responsibilities.

The Government are strongly committed to improving social work training; this commitment is embodied in the training strategy for the personal social services which we announced last year. Particularly, we are assisting local authorities to fulfil their responsibilities for training staff through the Department's training support programme, central grant for which has been increased from £24·8 million to £29 million in 1992-93. Approximately 140,000 local authority staff are expected to benefit from training under this programme this year, nearly half of whom work in residential care. Funds have been reserved from the grant this year specifically to boost the output of qualifying training for residential child care staff. Further funds have been provided to the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work to provide grants for qualifying training for heads of voluntary children's homes.

The Department has also funded an expert group to look at the content of diploma in social work courses for residential child care staff. This report is expected very shortly.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide extra funds to local authorities to cover extra training for staff working in residential care.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department is already providing extra funds to local authorities for training through the training support programme specific grant. The grant was introduced in 1988-89 at a level of £7 million and has been increased year on year to its current level of £29 million. Approximately half of the 140,000 staff expected to benefit from training under the programme work in residential care.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual cost of distinction awards paid to national health service consultants in England over the period 1982-1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of national health service consultants in each specialty get distinction awards, A+, A, B and C; and of these what proportion do private practice.

Dr. Mawhinney: The distribution of distinction awards for England including special health authorities and Wales by specialty at 31 December 1991, the latest date for which information is available, is set out in the table.

Information is not held centrally on the number of award holders undertaking private practice.

Distinction awards: Analysis by type of award, specialty and percentage distribution at 31 December 1991 – England and Wales

Toxic Shock Syndrome

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the number of cases over the last five years of tampon-related toxic shock syndrome; and how many of these have resulted in death.

Mr. Sackville: Statistics from the public health laboratory service indicate that in recent years cases of tampon-related toxic shock syndrome average around 15 per year with one or two deaths for the United Kingdom as a whole.

GP Lists

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the average number of patients per general practitioner in the Durham area in 1979 and 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 1 October 1979, the average number of patients on general medical practitioner lists in the Durham family health services authority area was 2,461 and at 1 October 1991, this has reduced by 19 per cent. to 1,989.

Community Care

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on community care assessments.

Mr. Yeo: From April 1993, when the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 is fully implemented, local authorities will take lead responsibility for assessing individuals' needs for care and arranging packages of care services whether in a person's own home or in a residential care or nursing home. Assessments and the provision of services will often require contributions from other agencies. Assessment of individuals' care needs underpins our proposals and will ensure services are tailored to need.

Homeopathic Medicines

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the prescription of (a) evening primrose oil and (b) other homeopathic medicines by the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: Two evening primrose oil preparations have been granted product licences by the Medicines Control Agency (MCA), and are available on national health service prescripton for the conditions for which they are licensed. A number of other preparations have been considered by the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances, but the committee considers that they have no therapeutic use in the treatment of disease in the community. They are therefore included in the list of products that cannot be prescribed on the national health service.

General practitioners can prescribe any product which they consider necessary for the treatment of their national health service patients provided it is not included in that list, and provided that they are prepared to justify their prescribing, if challenged, to their family health services authority.

National Health Service Consultants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual regional distribution of distinction awards, A+, A, B and C, paid to national health service consultants by specialty over the period 1982 to 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am arranging for tables showing the distribution of distinction awards, by grade of award, within each specialty for each region, the special health authorities and Wales, for the years ended 31 December 1982 to 1991 inclusive to be placed in the Library.

Volunteers

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she has any plans to arrange for volunteers to feed patients who cannot feed themselves; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We welcome the valuable contribution that volunteers make in helping patients in hospital, including, where appropriate, helping those who cannot feed themselves. The extent to which volunteers are used is essentially a local issue which must be decided by the hospital, patient and volunteer concerned.

Imigran

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the drug Imigran used for relief to migraine sufferers, is available on prescription in its (a) injection form and (b) tablet form; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Both Imigran tablets and injections have been licensed and are available as prescription-only medicines.

Eye Tests

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will publish the latest figures available showing (a) the average charge for private sight tests and (b) the uptake of private sight tests by the over-60s since restrictions on NHS tests were introduced;

(2) if she will conduct a survey to find out the total number of private sight tests carried out for each year since restrictions on national health service tests were introduced; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department collects information on national health service sight tests only. Other sight tests are private transactions. The optical profession conducts regular surveys on the total number of sight tests, both national health service and private. Their findings indicate that the number of sight tests has returned to 1987 levels —the last typical year before changes in the sight-testing arrangements were announced.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the proceedings of the board of the London ambulance service to be made public.

Mr. Sackville: The proceedings of the London Ambulance Service Board are not made public. Accountability is exercised through the South West Thames regional health authority whose proceedings are subject to the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960.

Royal Northern Hospital

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultation she is proposing on the loss of wards in the Royal Northern hospital in Islington and Bloomsbury health authority.

Mr. Sackville: The Bloomsbury and Islington health authority consulted interested parties on its proposals to centralise the acute services in Islington on the Archway and St. Mary's sites of the Whittington hospital. Following Islington community health council (CHC) opposition to those proposals the matter was referred to Ministers.

The hon. Member, together with the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) and the CHC, met with my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 5 February to discuss those proposals.

I subsequently wrote to the chairman of Bloomsbury and Islington health authority on 1 June, copying the letter to the hon. Member, stating that it would not be right in this case for Ministers to intervene to overturn the decision by local management.

Chiropodists

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will reconsider allowing privately trained and qualified chiropodists to work within the national health service; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: All people employed as chiropodists in the national health service must be state registered, whether or not they were privately trained. There are no plans to change this arrangement.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will initiate a new comparison in the qualifications and working practices of private and national health service practising chiropodists; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. This would be a matter for the profession.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Offences

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of males reaching the age of 30 years in 1991, or in the latest year for which statistics are available, had at some time committed (a) a notifiable and (b) a summary offence.

Mr. Jack: The information is not available in the form requested. Of all males born in 1953, one third had been convicted of a standard list offence by the age of 30. The information has been produced from a series of Cohort studies of persons born in 1953, 1958 and 1963, published in Home Office statistical bulletin issue 32/89 "Criminal and custodial careers of those born in 1953, 1958 and 1963", a copy of which is in the Library.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Officials are aware of the need to consult the registrar about proposed legislation or other initiatives which might affect or be affected by the Data Protection Act 1984, and will consult him as necessary when planning the collection, use or disclosure of automated personal data.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe each separate index of personal data stored on the intelligence and investigation unit at Harmondsworth; how many items of data are stored under each index; how many entries are in each index; and what was the number of accesses to each index over the last year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are two databases on the Immigration Service's intelligence and investigation unit's computer at Harmondsworth which contain personal data:

the ISIIU index contains information considered to be of long term immigration interest;

the United Kingdom passport abuse database contains information about United Kingdom passports which have been detected in fraudulent use.

Individual records in the ISIIU database contain 11 fields of information. Those in the United Kingdom passport abuse database contain 15, of which 11 are the same as in the ISIIU index.

The ISIIU database contains about 500,000 records; the United Kingdom passport abuse database about 3,500. No record is kept of the number of accesses to either database.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe, in a form that does not jeopardise the prevention of crime or national security, the circumstances when the security services or the Customs and Excise (a) have terminal access to police computers or (b) can receive information from police computers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Access to police computer systems and the disclosure of information from these systems and from the police national computer are matters for chief constables.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect on privacy of freely available copies of the council tax valuation lists, in relation to the list's combination with (a) the electoral register, (b) the credit reference agencies and (c) vendors of databases derived from public sources; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. Any evidence of misuse of automated personal information will be investigated by the Data Protection Registrar, who has responsibility for enforcing the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings he has held with bodies representing the views of data subjects in relation to the European Commission's proposals for a data protection directive.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None since taking up this post, but the then Minister of State had one such meeting on 21 February 1991. Ministers and officials are regularly informed of the views of all who have an interest in data protection, whether as data subjects or data users.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe each category of suspect index made available to officials at ports of entry; how many suspect persons are under each category; how many items of data are stored about each category; and what was the number of accesses made to each index over the last year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is a single suspect index, the purpose of which is to alert the immigration officer to take action in respect of an individual who might not be identified in the course of routine examination. The index currently contains about 10,000 entries. No record is kept of the number of occasions on which it is consulted by immigration officers.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe each separate index of personal data stored on INDECS; how many items of data are stored on INDECS under each index; how many entries are in each index; and what was the number of accesses to each index over the last year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Data are stored on INDECS according to a unique arrival number and relate to the immigration status of individuals given conditional leave to enter the United Kingdom on a non-permanent basis under the terms of the Immigration Act 1971. In each case, details entered on the landing card are recorded together with the expiry date of the leave to enter. The number of data elements linked to the arrival number will range from 20 to 40 according to the conditions applying and the number of subsequent movements in and out of the United Kingdom. There were 2·8 million records on INDECS at the beginning of June 1992. Information on the number of accesses to the system is not available.

Police Officers (Attacks)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of 1990 and 1991 (a) how many police officers were attacked on duty, (b) how many of their assailants were charged and (c) how many were convicted.

Mr. Jack: Information collected by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary shows that in England and Wales 17,568 police officers were assaulted on duty in 1990 and 18,372 in 1991. No information is collected centrally on how many assailants were charged or convicted. A survey covering the second half of 1991 showed that 2,500 offenders were sentenced for assaults against the police during that period. The results of this survey were published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 3/92, a copy of which is in the Library.

Trespass

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a Bill to make trespass a criminal offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We have no plans to extend the criminal law to all cases of trespass. However the Government recognise that the current law relating to squatting in premises is unsatisfactory and we have recently completed a consultation exercise which sought views on a range of possible options for improving the protection available to owners and legitimate occupiers. We are presently considering what action would be appropriate in the light of responses to that exercise.

Prisons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list, by prison establishment, the current number of inmates held; what is the recommended establishment per Her Majesty's prison; and what was the comparable figure 12 months ago;

(2) if he will list by Her Majesty's prison establishment, the current number of inmates held per cell; what was the comparable figure 12 months ago; and if he will indicate those establishments where women are held.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of inmates held in each Prison Service establishment in England and Wales and the certified normal accommodation (CNA) for 4 June 1991 and 4 June 1992 for those establishments are shown in the table.

Information on the number of inmates held per cell is not collected centrally. But on 10 May (the latest date for which figures are available) 9,392 inmates were being held two to a cell designed for one, 1,294 fewer than 12 months ago. The number of prisoners being held three to a cell designed for one was 1,038 which was 969 fewer than in May 1991.

Police (Absence from Duty)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instruct chief constables to maintain separate records in respect of absences from duty of police officers due to (a) injury on duty and (b) other sickness.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) on 20 May, column 141. Separate records are already maintained on absences from duty of police officers due to sickness as a result of assault on duty, and other sickness. The recent issue of guidance about the recording of data will ensure that more accurate information is collected.

Prevention of Terrorism

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by (a) year and (b) nationality for the last 10 years the number of people detained under the Prevention of Terrorism Acts.

Mr. Jack: Information on the number of people detained under the Prevention of Terrorism Acts in Great Britain is given in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 9/92 "Statistics on the operation of prevention of terrorism legislation—1992 first quarter". Table 1 contains annual information about detentions in connection with Northern Irish terrorism for the past ten years. The information for international terrorism is given in table 2 for the period since the introduction of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 on 22 March 1984. A copy of this bulletin is in the Library. Information on the nationality of those detained under the legislation could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Automatic Fingerprint Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held with the Data Protection Registrar with respect to the standardisation of automatic fingerprint systems (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) as part of the Trevi arrangements.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. It is the responsibility of individual chief constables to register their local computer systems with the Data Protection Registrar. As for the national automatic fingerprint identification system being implemented by the Home Office, it is still too early in its development for useful discussions about it and its relationship to the Trevi arrangements to be held with the registrar.

Boundary Commissioners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the parliamentary boundary commissioners and assistant commissioners for the Yorkshire and Humberside area, giving their period of office, and appropriate qualifications.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Madam Speaker is chairman of the Commission. The other members are:

	Appointed by	Period of appointment
Mr. Justice Knox	Lord Chancellor	1.1.91—31.12.95[1]
Miss Sheila Cameron QC	The Home Secretary	3.3.89—31.12.92
Mr. David Macklin	The Secretary of State for the Environment	16.2.89—31.12.92

[1] Deputy Chairman. First appointed 1 January 1987.

The deputy chairman is required to be a High Court judge. No other formal qualifications are prescribed.

The Home Secretary has appointed the following assistant commissioners for the purpose of conducting local inquiries during the general review of constituencies currently being undertaken by the Commission:

Miss Caroline Alton
Michael Findlay Baker Esq, QC
George Robert Bartlett Esq, QC
Francis Martin Thomas Burkett Esq
John Anthony Bush Esq
James Charles Gibbs Esq
David Thomas Hallchurch Esq
Simon Tristram Hammond Esq
Michael Guy Vicat Harrison Esq, QC
Christopher Robert Jervis Esq
William Martin Kingston Esq
Brian Joseph Knight Esq, QC
Michael Edward Lewer Esq, QC
Humphrey John Lloyd Esq, QC
Donald Alexander McConville Esq
John Oliver Neligan Esq
David Price Esq
John Edward Anthony Samuels Esq, QC
Paul Anthony Spencer Esq
John Victor Williamson Esq

Additional assistant commissioners will be appointed in due course. Appointees are usually senior lawyers with extensive court experience, nominated by the Commission.

Commisioners and assistant commissioners are appointed to consider proposals for constituencies across the whole of England. Where practicable, local inquiries are conducted by assistant commissioners from a nearby area.

Vehicle Clamping

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding the clamping operation being run by Nationwide Carpark Services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

I receive correspondence from time to time regarding the activities of wheelclamping companies on private land but have no record of receiving any representations concerning Nationwide Carpark Services. The issues concern the rights of private citizens on land off the highway. Unlike wheelclamping on-street, the activities of wheelclampers off-street are governed by common law, not by statute. We are keeping the matter under review.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Student Grants

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many full-time third level students (a) have had to withdraw from their course and (b) returned to their course after a period of absence due to illness, during the past five academic years.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Academic year	Withdrawals due to illness	Returned to course
1986-87	158	135
1987-88	162	136
1988-89	148	126
1989-90	148	117
1990-91	159	121
Totals	775	635

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what current financial provisions exist to support full-time third level students during periods of absence from their course, as a result of illness; and if he will introduce appropriate regulations to provide for such students who do not as a result receive education grant or other benefits.

Mr. Hanley: Students retain their entitlement to grant under the Students Awards Regulations for periods of illness lasting not more than 28 days. Students can also apply for a student loan if they are still meeting course attendance requirements. Assistance from access funds may also be obtained.

Income support and housing benefit are available throughout the year to prescribed groups of students, in particular, lone parents and disabled people. Any student who is ill for more than 28 weeks and has been submitting medical evidence can claim benefits available to disabled students.

There are no plans to change the current arrangements.

Vehicle Licensing Authority

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average length of time taken to process an application for (a) a driver's licence, cars, (b) an HGV licence, (c) a PSV licence, (d) a provisional driving licence and (e) a driving test.

Mr. Atkins: The average processing times are as follows:

—An ordinary driving licence (cars)—15 working days.
—An IGV (formerly known as HGV) licence—16 working days.
—A PCV (formerly known as PSV Bus) licence—16 working days.
—A taxi driver licence (initial)—43 working days.
(renewal)—6 working days.
—A provisional driver licence—15 working days.
—A driving test—43 working days.

Applications for LGV and PCV licences which have to be referred to the medical authorities or the police for further advice on average take twice as long.

Figures for taxi driver licences and driving tests were provided by the chief executive of the Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average monthly number of (a) drivers licences, (b) HGV licences, (c) PSV licences, (d) provisional driving licences and (e) driving test applications processed by the Vehicle Licensing Authority in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is as follows (based on 1991-92 financial year):

	Number
Driver licences	6,900
LGV (formerly known as HGV) licences	910
PCV (formerly known as PSV Bus) licences	910
Taxi driver licences	123
Provisional driver licences	2,900
Driving test applications	4,175

Figures for taxi driver licences and driving test applications were provided by the chief executive of the Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency.

Parole

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners were scheduled for parole in 1992; and of these how many have subsequently had their hearings postponed.

Mr. Mates: There is no system of parole for prisoners in Northern Ireland. However, there are schemes which allow for the temporary release of prisoners on compassionate grounds, summer and Christmas home leave for the longest serving prisoners, and pre-release leave.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners were scheduled to have their sentences reviewed by the Life Sentence Review Board in 1992; and how many of these have subsequently been informed that their reviews have been postponed.

Mr. Mates: A total of 80 indeterminate sentenced prisoners cases are scheduled for review by the Life Sentence Review Board during 1992. Thirty seven of these have been reviewed to date, of these, the review board decided to defer 11 cases for further review.

Police Complaints

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will lay before Parliament the annual report of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The report, which is the fourth annual report produced by the Commission since its inception in 1988, has been laid before Parliament today. It reflects the Commission's considerable efforts to maintain and build upon its relationship with both the public and the Police Service. It also continues the essential process of promoting wider understanding of what the Commission is required to do and how it does it by providing detailed and helpful explanations of a number of important aspects of its work. These include how the Commission supervises complaints against the police, its role in disciplinary proceedings following a complaint and the procedure by which relatively minor complaints are resolved informally. It makes clear that, as is right and proper, the police are accountable to the community they serve.

I am grateful to the Commission for all its work. I have no doubt that it will continue to contribute significantly to the enhancement of public confidence in the police. I know it will continue to apply its own high standards of objectivity and impartiality—thus ensuring that complaints against the police are thoroughly and fairly investigated. In doing so it will have my fullest support.

Rathfriland Ward

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any representations have been made, directly or indirectly, through the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference or otherwise, to Her Majesty's Government or the Boundary Commissioner by the Government of the Republic of Ireland concerning the proposal to transfer the ward of Rathfriland from Newry and Mourne district council to Banbridge district council.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 2 June 1992]: Responsibility for reviewing local government boundaries and wards rests entirely with the Local Government Boundaries Commissioner who is independent of Government. At the inter-governmental conference meeting in November 1991 both Governments took note of the Commissioner's independence in drawing up his recommendations. At no time during the current review have representations been made by either the United Kingdom or the Irish Government, directly or indirectly, to the Commissioner about the Rathfriland ward.

DEFENCE

Support Management Group

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much accommodation is required to house the support management group and related command units following his review, together with ancillary domestic accommodation for personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Some 19,200 sq m of office accommodation; and 1,760 sq m of workshop and hangar space. The estimated requirement for domestic accommodation is some 350 married quarters, and some 270 mess spaces. The requirement for domestic accommodation for support staffs would vary according to location chosen, and the eventual provision of domestic accommodation would depend on the individual circumstances of those involved.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the sites examined as potential accommodation for the relocation of the support management group with or without the related logistics command units, in the vicinity of Harrogate.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Harrogate itself; the MOD site at Pennypot; RAF Church Fenton; and RAF Linton on Ouse. The latter two sites were assessed as homes for technical support services, with and without the support management group.

Adjutant General's Headquarters

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made with the relocation of the Adjutant General's headquarters.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A study is now being undertaken to examine the efficiency and cost effectiveness of forming an integrated Army personnel centre outside London. In addition to the headquarters of the Adjutant General and the military secretary, the review will encompass the manning and record offices, regimental pay offices and the Army pay office (officers accounts). The study team is expected to report by the end of the year: no decisions will be taken before the study has been completed and all concerned (including the trade unions) have been fully consulted.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

COCOM

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of COCOM.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 5 June at column 673.

Antarctica

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy on the United Kingdom's abandoned bases in Antarctica.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government are fully committed to implementation of the environmental protocol to the Antarctic treaty.

The British Antarctic survey is already implementing fully the provisions of the protocol. It has undertaken a survey of all accessible abandoned United Kingdom bases in Antarctica. A programme either to remove the bases, or to retain some as emergency refuges or historic sites is in preparation.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to support the new international instrument negotiated for conservation of Antarctica.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government are fully committed to implementation of the environmental protocol to the Antarctic treaty.

Boat People

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what latest discussions he has had with the Government of Vietnam and the Governor of Hong Kong about the plight of the boat people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Most recently, I discussed the problem of Vietnamese migrants in Hong Kong and repatriation of non-refugees with the Vietnamese Foreign Minister, Nguyen Manh Cam, during his visit to London on 4 to 5 June. I also discussed this issue with the governor of Hong Kong during my visit to the territory from 25 to 29 May.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people remain in camps in Hong Kong; and what timescale is envisaged for their resettlement.

Mr. Goodlad: A total of 54,686 Vietnamese migrants were in the camps in Hong Kong on 4 June 1992. Those determined to be refugees will be resettled in third countries. Those who are not have no option but to return to Vietnam. At current rates of arrivals in Hong Kong and returns to Vietnam, it will take over three years to clear the camps.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the Vietnamese boat people have been resettled from Hong Kong (a) in individual countries and (b) in total.

Mr. Goodlad: Between 1979 and April 1992, a total of 129,607 Vietnamese boat people who were considered to be refugees were resettled from Hong Kong in the following countries:

Refuseniks

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Gersh Furman and his family of Kazan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made various representations to the Russian authorities on behalf of Gersh Furman. In Moscow in March I raised human rights issues with the Russian first deputy Foreign Minister, including the case of Mr. Furman.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Pyotr Slutsky and his family of Primorsky Kray.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can consider raising with the Russian authorities the case of Pyotr Slutsky and his family, but to make effective representations we would need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Yakov Rovinsky and his family of Moscow.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can consider raising with the Russian authorities the case of Yakov Rovinsky and his family, but to make effective representations we would need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Igor Gopp and his family of St. Petersburg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made various representations to the Russian authorities on behalf of Igor Gopp. In Moscow in March I raised human rights issues with the Russian first deputy Foreign Minister, including the case of Mr. Gopp.

United Nations Centre for Transnational Corporations

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to make representations to the Secretary General of the United Nations for the restoration and strengthening of the United Nations centre for transnational corporations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcome the recent restructuring of the United Nations secretariat and the Secretary-General's efforts in this respect, which include the establishment of the new Department of Transnational Corporations and Management. The expectation is that this will lead to an improved focus on priority issues, which are increasingly multi-disciplinary, and a better use of resources and co-ordination of work between the various parts of the secretariat.

EC President

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the period of office of the President of the EC Commission comes to an end; and if consideration has been given to extending this period beyond this date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The period of office of the president of the EC Commission will end, along with that of the rest of the Commission, on 6 January 1993. A decision on the next Commission president is likely to be taken at the European Council in Lisbon on 26-27 June.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Nations sanctions against Serbia preclude the provision of emergency relief aid by humanitarian organisations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Foodstuffs and supplies intended strictly for medical purposes are exempt from the embargo imposed by United Nations Security Council resolution 757. Applications for the delivery of other humanitarian supplies will have to be considered by the Sanctions Committee established by SCR 724.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to secure the onward travel of the two vehicles owned by the charity Blythwood, which are being prevented by the German authorities from completing their journey to deliver blankets and bedding to the refugee centre in Belgrade.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A request has been put to the United Nations Sanctions Committee for permission to deliver the consignment to Belgrade.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Transport Office

Mr. Wilson: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission if he will outline the arrangements, including the period of franchise, under which Thomas Cook Ltd. provides the travel agency service within the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Beith: The present arrangements under which the Transport Office is operated on behalf of both Houses by Thomas Cook Ltd. date from an agreement concluded in August 1985. They are set out in detail in the third report from the Services Committee of Session 1984-85 (HC 437); but have been subsequently amended and extended by resolutions of the Services and Administration Committees.

Under the terms of the Services Committee's resolution of 15 May 1990 the 1985 agreement between the House and Thomas Cook Ltd. for the operation of the Transport Office was extended beyond its original four years for an indefinite period; but it was a recommendation of that Committee that these arrangements should be fully reviewed within 12 months of the beginning of this Parliament (HC 100-iv). It is expected that the Administration Committee will be invited to initiate that review as an early priority.

Thomas Cook Ltd. is required to report regularly to the Administration Committee and to the Transport Office consumers' panel whose chairman is a member of that Committee and which includes representatives of the Finance and Administration Department and the main user groups.

Full details of the services provided by the Transport Office are contained in the Booker's reference guide issued by Thomas Cook Ltd. to all Members and in the Members' handbook.

WALES

Hospital Incinerators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the locations of hospital incinerators in Wales which have not been registered with the local authority.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: District health authorities in Wales have confirmed that applications for the authorisation of incineration processes have been submitted to local authorities for all incinerators currently in use.

Environmental Care

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to develop community-based primary environmental care programmes in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The environmental programme for Wales encompasses a wide range of policies and initiatives, including measures to support environmental improvement at the community level. Support for locally based action includes the Environment Wales initiative, which provides assistance to voluntary groups; the community revival strategy for the south Wales valleys; as well as funding for the activities of the Groundwork trusts in Wales.

Arsenic Contamination

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department has investigated the levels of arsenic contamination in mining spoil used in concrete for house building in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and any agency which reports to his Department in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Government's memorandum on this subject which was submitted to the Environment Committee of this House in the last Session. It has now been published by HMSO as part of the Environment Committee's report on Coastal Zone Protection and Planning Volume II, Minutes of Evidence and Appendices.

Swansea Canal Society

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance his Department is currently providing to the Swansea Canal Society; and what further assistance is under consideration.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department is not currently providing or considering any assistance to the Swansea Canal Society.

Ramsar Sites

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to designate further Ramsar sites in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department is currently processing two submissions for Ramsar site status, and the Countryside Council for Wales is considering further submissions.

Plantings

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hectares of non-native species and native broadleaf species have been planted in Wales in each year since 1984.

Mr. David Hunt: Information in this detail is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

National Trails

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to designate further national trails in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The responsibility for making proposals for designating long-distance routes in Wales rests with the Countryside Council for Wales, although these require my right hon. Friend's approval. There are no such proposals currently before the Department.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Officials are aware of the need to consult the registrar about proposed legislation or other initiatives which might affect or be affected by the Data Protection Act 1984, and will consult him as necessary when planning the collection, use or disclosure of automated personal data.

Environment Programme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which organisations have received grants to date under the Environment Wales programme; and how much has been allocated in each instance.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Special Protection Areas

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the designated special protection areas currently developed in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Previously designated areas are Skoholm and Skomer, the Dee Estuary and Grassholm. I have today announced the designation of four more sites: Glannau Aberdaron/Yns Enlli; Ynys Feurig/Cemlyn bay/the Skerries; Glannau Ynys Gybi and Traeth Lafan.

Conservation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to designate new areas of heritage conservation and marine nature reserves in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Heritage coasts in Wales are defined by local authorities in consultation with the Countryside Council for Wales.

My right hon. Friend is responsible for designating marine nature reserves in Wales following an application from the Countryside Council for Wales. There are no such applications currently before the Department.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he hopes to announce his final proposals for local government reorganisation in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Later this year, in a White Paper.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he hopes to introduce legislation to give effect to his proposals for local government reorganisation in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1994.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he plans that the new authorities established as a consequence of his plans for local government reorganisation shall take over responsibilities from the present district and county authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: On 1 April 1995.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not held centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what efforts are currently being undertaken by his Department to encourage more applications for training places as speech therapists in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is currently no shortage of applicants for the training in speech therapy provided in Wales.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much is currently allocated by his Department to each individual health authority area in Wales for the training of speech therapists; and what plans he has to increase the allocation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office makes no specific allocation to health authorities for the purpose of training speech therapists. How much district health authorities choose to invest in speech therapy training services to meet the needs of their resident populations is a matter for determination in the light of local priorities and local circumstances.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sports Grounds (Safety)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to publish the next edition of the "Guide to Safety of Sports Grounds", known as the green guide.

Mr. Mellor: I have no plans to publish a new edition of the "Guide to Safety of Sports Grounds".

Football Supporters Association

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to hold discussions with the Football Supporters Association; and whether the association's views have been taken into account when considering the implementation of the Taylor report.

Mr. Mellor: I have no specific plans at present to meet the Football Supporter's Association but would be willing to meet both it and the National Federation of Football Supporters Clubs. The views of both organisations have been sought on the review of all seating at Football League grounds which I announced on 4 June.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and any agency which reports to his Department in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's memorandum on this subject which was submitted to the Environment Committee of this House in the last Session. It has now been published by HMSO as part of the Environment Committee's report on Coastal Zone Protection and Planning, Volume II, Minutes of Evidence and Appendices. Since the preparation of the memorandum the responsibilities of the Department of the Environment for the heritage, including the protection of historic wrecks, and those of the Department of Education for sport and recreation have transferred to the Department of National Heritage.

Works of Art

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he intends to proceed with the proposals to list works of art to prevent their export.

Mr. Mellor: I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) on 5 June 1992 at columns 646-47.

TRANSPORT

Bicyclists

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bicyclists sustained serious head injuries in the United Kingdom in 1991, or the latest year for which statistics are available; what study he has made of the potential impact of a regulation requiring all bicyclists to wear crash helmets on this injury rate; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Provisional figures for 1991 indicate that 239 cyclists were reported killed and 3,939 seriously injured in road accidents in Great Britain. The standard report form does not provide information on the part of the body affected. However research by the Transport Research Laboratory suggests that 53 per cent. of cyclists reporting to a hospital had injuries to the head and that had helmets been worn some 11 per cent. of serious injuries would not have occurred whilst a further 18 per cent. would have been only slight injuries. The sales of helmets have increased in recent years, particularly for children following the Department's television campaign in 1991. We shall continue to encourage this trend but have no plans to introduce compulsion.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the parking of heavy goods vehicles in residential and other unsuitable areas; and what proposals he has to assist local authorities to deal with this problem.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I receive correspondence from time to time on this issue. Local authorities have a wide range of powers under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 to control or prohibit lorry parking. These are described in detail in the Department's publication "Lorries in the Community", produced in 1990 in conjunction with the Civic Trust and the County Surveyors' Society, and in the accompanying manual of guidance issued to all local authorities. Parking arrangements for heavy goods vehicles may also be controlled by the traffic commissioners under operator licensing.

International Passenger Station, Kent

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the latest position as regards the provision of an international passenger station at Ashford, Kent.

Mr. Freeman: British rail has announced that it is soon to submit an application for planning permission for the central Ashford proposal for an international passenger station. I welcome this move, which will help allow early progress.

Shipping (Foreign Flags)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will assess the impact of the transfer of merchant shipping to foreign flags since 1979 on the balance of payments deficit.

Mr. Norris: For the calculation of the balance of payments, the sea transport account includes the international income and expenditure of all ships owned by United Kingdom residents, without reference to flag of registry. Thus the transfer of ships to foreign flags has no direct impact on the balance of payments.

Licences

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average length of time taken to process an application for (a) a driver's licence, cars, (b) an HGV licence, (c) a PSV licence, (d) a provisional driving licence and (e) a driving test.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The average length of time currently taken to process a full and provisional car driving licence is nine days and eight days for a lorry and bus licence. This includes three days taken to return the licence to the customer. Driving test applications currently take seven days in total.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average monthly number of (a) drivers licences, (b) HGV licences, (c) PSV licences, (d) provisional driving licences and (e) driving test applications processed by the Vehicle Licensing Authority in the most recent year for which figures are available for (i) England, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Wales.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Driving licence information is available only in a national figure. LGV and PCV figures are not available for the years prior to 1991-92. Over the last three years the monthly average number of driving licences processed was:

Year	Provisional (Car)	Full (Car)	LGV	PCV	Total
1989-90	94,465	447,538	—	—	542,003
1990-91	80,010	439,042	—	—	519,052
1991-92	76,990	453,176	35,086	7,186	572,438

Driving tests applications figures are available for England/Wales and Scotland.

Year	England and Wales	Scotland	Total
1989-90	165,223	15,136	180,359
1990-91	156,594	14,740	171,334
1991-92	137,373	13,627	151,000

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of railway staff employed per million train kilometres for each of the EC member states, Sweden, Norway and Finland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 8 June 1992]: I have placed the information requested in the Library of the House and am writing to the hon. Member sending him a copy.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Marginal Tax Rates

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the numbers of (i) working heads, (ii) dependants and (iii) families with children facing marginal tax and benefit withdrawal rates in the manner of his answer to the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) of 23 January 1991, Official Report, column 249; and if he will identify how many more families with children will face higher marginal tax rates as a result of the change in the hours rule from 24 to 16 per week for family credit.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table. This is not directly comparable with previous answers, in that these related to the population of benefit recipients working 24 hours per week or more, whereas the current table adds in all those working 16 to 24 hours.

It is unlikely that any families with children will face higher deduction rates as a result of the change of hours rule. This is because those affected would have continued to receive income support if the rule had remained at 24 hours, and so would have faced marginal deduction rates of 100 per cent. (after taking into account the earnings disregard).

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Officials are aware of the need to consult the registrar about proposed legislation or other initiatives which might affect or be affected by the Data Protection Act 1984, and will consult him as necessary when planning the collection, use or disclosure of automated personal data.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on the implications of the Danish referendum on the Maastricht treaty for the Barber protocol and the rights of occupational pensioners;

(2) if he will take steps to implement the Barber protocol before the remainder of the Maastricht treaty is ratified.

Miss Widdecombe: The protocol to article 119 of the treaty of Rome forms an integral part of the Maastricht agreement which has to be ratified as a whole.

ENVIRONMENT

Building Temperatures

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have been undertaken to date to enforce statutory instrument No. 1013 (1980) limiting temperatures in non-residential buildings to 19 deg C; and what proportion of these have ended in successful convictions.

Mr. Baldry: No prosecutions have been undertaken to date.

Council House Sales

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of properties sold by local authorities under the right-to-buy legislation in England in 1991; what was the average price paid after discount; and how many of these properties were flats.

Mr. Baldry: In 1991 about 51,900 dwellings were sold by local authorities in England under the right-to-buy legislation, approximately 13,900 of which were flats. The average price paid after discount for sitting-tenant sales, the vast majority of which are right-to-buy sales, is estimated to be £20,800 in 1991.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing, for each region in England, the number of local authority homes sold under the right-to-buy legislation since its introduction and that figure as a percentage of the total number of properties owned by local authorities in the region.

Mr. Baldry: The available information is given in the table.

Region	Right-to-buy sales to 31 December 1991	Sales as a percentage of stock[1]
North (excluding Cumbria)	89,689	21·2
Yorkshire and Humberside	116,450	19·2
East Midlands	103,141	24·1
Eastern	127,198	22·8
London Boroughs	165,462	18·0
South East	129,319	22·7
South West	96,097	24·8
West Midlands	128,915	20·5
North West (including Cumbria)	126,922	17·1
England	1,083,193	20·6

[1] These percentages are based on estimates of stock at 1 April 1979, calculated by adding back sales since then to the latest estimate of stock, as at 1 April 1991.

Gravel Extraction

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the public inquiry into the application by Aylett Gravel Company for gravel extraction on land at East Tilbury, Essex closed; on what date he received the inspector's report; on what date he published his decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is as follows:

Inquiry closed—21 December 1990.
Inspector's report received by the Secretary of State —6 November 1991.
Decision published—7 May 1992.

I cannot comment on individual applications but I can assure the hon. Gentleman that the inspector's report was considered very carefully before the Secretary of State made his decision.

Construction Industry

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the construction industry.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State keeps closely in touch with the construction industry and receives representations about it from time to time.

Air Pollution

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to improve the air quality at Tinsley, Sheffield, as measured by his air quality tests.

Mr. Maclean: The air quality measurements made at the Tinsley site suggest that motor traffic in the surrounding area is responsible for much of the oxides of nitrogen monitored there. From 31 December 1993, all new cars entering into service will have to comply with strict new European Community emission standards. This will result in a steady improvement in air quality at sites such as Tinsley.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue advice to residents of Tinsley, Sheffield, as to the health implications of the air quality tests conducted near to the M1 motorway.

Mr. Maclean: Advice on the health implications of air pollution episodes is available on a free telephone line (0800 556677) and from general practitioners. Daily air quality bulletins and forecasts are available on the same telephone line, on CEEFAX and in some newspapers.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the comparability of air quality measurements made at different types of sites.

Mr. Maclean: The comparability of air quality measurements of ozone and the oxides of nitrogen was examined for my Department by the photochemical oxidants review group in its first and second reports. Warren Spring laboratory has performed the same function for the smoke and sulphur dioxide surveys. The quality of urban air review group was asked in January to consider this issue for a wider range of urban pollutants.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are used to determine the location at which checks for air quality are carried out.

Mr. Maclean: Air quality monitoring carried out on behalf of the Department of the Environment usually requires expensive instrumentation, operating over extended periods, so careful siting is imperative. The aim is to assess the general exposure of the public and the natural environment to a range of pollutants of policy concern. These considerations determine the general locality in which measurements are undertaken; specific locations are selected on the basis of access, cost and security.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to Sheffield city council to their representations about the equipment and procedures used by his Department to measure air quality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) visited Sheffield last autumn and was pleased to see the comprehensive urban air pollution monitoring network which has been established there. The city council has been in correspondence with my Department about a number of issues concerning instrumentation, the choice of monitoring sites and the air quality bulletin system.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to review the policy in his Department's circular 2/87 for the award of costs to parties in appeals under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 and other legislation.

Mr. Baldry: We have today issued a consultative draft DOE and Welsh Office circular about awards of costs in planning and other similar proceedings, which would replace DOE circulars 2/87 and 23/91 (Welsh Office circular 5/87 and 77/91). A copy of the draft circular has been placed in the parliamentary Libraries.

Noise Review

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is considering bringing forward legislative proposals to respond to recommendations made in the report of the noise review working party.

Mr. Baldry: My Department issued yesterday a public consultation document containing proposals which would extend the statutory nuisance procedures to include noise in the street; improve the control of loud speakers in the street; and provide adoptive powers for the local authorities to require the fitting of cut-out devices to burgler alarms. The consultation document also deals with some points of clarification in the existing statutory nuisance provisions in the Environmental Protection Act, 1990. Copies of this consultation paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Tenants Choice

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the regulation and administration of the tenants' choice scheme.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 9 June 1992]: It is encouraging that two transfers of housing stock have now taken place under the tenants choice provisions of the Housing Act 1988, and a further five formal applications have been made to acquire property under these provisions. Implementation of the tenants choice scheme is the responsibility of the Housing Corporation and I have, therefore, asked the corporation to reply to the hon. Member direct with more information about the scheme.

Council Tax

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in assessing properties in the Easington district council area for the purpose of council tax.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

Good progress is being made and the valuation banding work is on target for completion by the due date.

EDUCATION

Residential Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to set up a higher education centre to lead research in residential care.

Mr. Forman: None. The setting up of such a centre, and its funding, would be a matter for consideration by the research funding bodies and individual higher education institutions, in response to demand from potential users of the research.

School Leavers

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Education for Great Britain and for each region and for each year since 1980, separately, for male and female and for 16 and 17 year olds, how many school leavers have (a) stayed in full-time education, (b) joined a youth opportunities scheme or youth training scheme or (c) entered a job; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The tables give details of the numbers of school leavers by age intending to (a) stay in full-time education other than school, (b) join YTS and (c) enter employment by individual regions in England since 1985. The year 1989-90 is the latest year for which the data are available.

The numbers going to youth training schemes have been collected separately only since 1988-89; prior to this the figures would have been included in the employment category.

Information prior to 1985 is not readily available in the format requested, that is, by age and region.

The figures for Wales and Scotland are the responsibilities of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland respectively.

Hearing-impaired Pupils

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to introduce regulations to require all teachers working with hearing-impaired pupils to obtain the additional qualification of teacher of the deaf.

Mr. Forth: Regulation 15 of the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1989 requires teachers of a class of pupils who are hearing impaired—but not including teachers of a craft, trade or domestic subject—to possess a qualification approved by my right hon. Friend.

The policy objective behind these regulations is to ensure a minimum standard of teaching expertise in handling such a class. There are no plans to extend the scope of the regulations.

PRIME MINISTER

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

When planning any project involving information technology, the standing instructions include a specific action to consider the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1984. In any case of doubt, the Data Protection Registrar is consulted. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is satisfied with the effectiveness of these arrangements.

International Parliamentary Assemblies

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy on the appointment of non-elected persons to the United Kingdom delegations to those international parliamentary assemblies for which he makes appointments.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

Any appointments my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister makes to United Kingdom delegations to international parliamentary assemblies are made in accordance with the rules of the assembly concerned.

Energy Tax

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government intend to support the EC energy tax proposal.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The Government will examine the European Commission's recent draft directive on a carbon/energy tax carefully, taking account of the outcome of the Rio summit, and the actions taken by other major countries to reduce carbon dioxide emissions.

Brazil

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with the authorities in Brazil what bilateral action can be taken to provide for the (a) housing requirements, (b) education requirements and (c) medical requirements of street children in Brazil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 8 June 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

We provide assistance under the ODA joint funding scheme to programmes for street children and other groups carried out in Brazil by non-governmental organisations. We are open to requests for external professional advice under our bilateral technical co-operation programme to Brazil.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with the authorities in Brazil what bilateral action can be taken to (a) tackle the plight of street children and (b) bring to justice their killers.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 8 June 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister plans to raise the matter during his visit. While it is for the Brazilian authorities to take measures to resolve the problem, we are doing what we can to alleviate the plight of street children by assisting the non-governmental organisations which work with them.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he intends to make about the plight of assassinated street children in Brazil, during his visit to Rio de Janeiro; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 8 June 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

The Government share the hon. Member's concern. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister plans to raise the matter in Rio de Janeiro.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Services Ombudsman

Mr. Mills: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, when the legal services ombudsman intends to publish his annual report.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The legal services ombudsman has today published his first annual report, and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Statistics

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish his proposals to replace the trade statistics source provided by the single administrative document.

Sir John Cope: With the completion of the single market on 1 January 1993, single administrative documents will no longer be required for trade within the European Community. Trade statistics will be collected through the new Intrastat system which is provided for in EC Council regulation 3330/91, published in Official Journal L316/1 dated 16 November 1991. This is a framework regulation which leaves many points of detail to implementing regulations which have not yet been finalised. Customs have kept traders in the United Kingdom informed of progress on a regular basis and will issue a public notice in September.

Statistics on trade in goods with non-EC countries will continue to be collected from single administrative documents.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish his proposals to introduce criminal penalties for failure to make statistical returns or discrepancies under the Intrastat regulations; and if he will detail those business organisations he has consulted on these proposals and indicate their concerns.

Sir John Cope: Customs has consulted the Institute of Directors and the Confederation of British Industry regarding proposals to introduce legislation. Concerns were expressed both about the nature of the proposed regime and the possibility of penalising innocent errors. These concerns are being taken into account in drawing up legislation analogous to the Statistics of Trade Act 1947. The legislation will be introduced as a regulation, made under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972, to be laid before Parliament this summer.

VAT

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the special provisions to apply to the sale of new boats, aircraft and motor vehicles for intra-Community trade VAT returns from 1 January 1993.

Sir John Cope: Intra-Community supplies of goods which qualify as new means of transport will always be subject to VAT in the EC member state of destination. United Kingdom VAT-registered sellers of such goods will therefore not account in their VAT returns for the VAT due on those which are removed to other member states. However, people who acquire new means of transport in the United Kingdom from suppliers in other member states will either account for VAT in their VAT return or pay VAT directly to Customs and Excise depending on whether they are registered.

Drug Imports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by year for the last five years and the current year to date the value of counterfeit medicines being imported into the United Kingdom that have been discovered by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: There have been no importations of counterfeit medicines discovered by Customs and Excise in the past five years.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the use of fiscal instruments to encourage energy efficiency investment.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady) on 4 June 1992 at column 634.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money from the United Kingdom is invested abroad; and what is the level of income generated as a result.

Mr. Nelson: The latest estimates of levels of overseas assets held by United Kingdom residents are contained in table 8.1 of the annual Pink Book 1991 "UK Balance of Payments", published by the CSO. Estimates of interest, profits and dividends received by United Kingdom residents from overseas assets are contained in table D of the quarterly balance of payments press notice, CSO(92)35. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Global Environment Facility

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action is being undertaken by his Department to ensure that Third world Governments are fully represented in the decision-making of the global environment facility.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply. The Minister for Overseas Development is responsible for the global environment facility. The United Kingdom has pressed for global environment facility to evolve to ensure full and effective representation by developing countries. The GEF participants meeting on 29-30 April agreed that membership of the GEF should be open to all countries and that it would fund programmes and projects, with agreed global environmental benefits, which are country driven and are consistent with developing countries' national priorities.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Development Grants

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of grants paid by the Overseas Development Administration to non-governmental organisations working on overseas development projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1992-93 the Overseas Development Administration has allocated £47 million to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations working on overseas development projects. Of this figure, £28 million is earmarked for the joint funding scheme, £17·8 million is allocated to the volunteer programme and £1·2 million is provided in miscellaneous grants to non-governmental organisations. This excludes funds for disaster and refugee relief, food-aid and for projects which NGOs are implementing on our behalf.

Cash Flows

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being undertaken by the Overseas Development Administration to explore ways of limiting cash flows from lower to upper income countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Cash flows from lower to upper income countries can be limited through debt relief and through pursuance of policies by lower income countries which attract investment and discourage capital flight.

The Government have consistently taken the lead in promoting debt relief measures for the poorest countries. Agreement to begin implementing the Prime Minister's Trinidad terms initiative to relieve the burden of debt on these countries was achieved in December 1991. Five countries have already benefited from the terms, and we expect more to do so over the coming months. As these new arrangements take effect, we can expect a significant reduction in repayments due to Government creditors. In addition, the ODA has relieved developing countries of around £1,000 million of old aid loans since 1980.

The United Kingdom has supported and provided its share of the finances needed to implement a 1989 agreement, known as the Brady plan, to help deal with the problems of a commercial bank debt. Under the Brady plan, the IMF and World bank set aside a part of their existing lending to indebted countries to support commercial debt reduction operations. They do this by financing debt buy-backs at a discount, or by providing collateral for reduced principal or interest payments. We are now seeing the fruits of this agreement and arrangements to cancel substantial proportions of commercial bank debt have been agreed, or are likely to be agreed soon, with most of the largest debtors.

The pursuit of policies aimed at sustained economic growth is fundamental to overcoming the problem of outward financial flows. One of the main aims of our aid programme is to help developing countries do this as effectively as possible. Recent experience in Latin America shows that determined adjustment and policy reform efforts can quickly attract considerable amounts of foreign direct investment. There has been progress also, particularly in Mexico and Chile, regarding the effective mobilisation of domestic resources, including substantial return of flight capital.

Commodity Prices

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being undertaken by the Overseas Development Administration to support and stabilise commodity prices in lower income countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We participate as part of the European Community in Stabex and Sysmin, schemes under the Lomé convention for compensating African, Caribbean and Pacific countries for loss of commodity export earnings. We also participate in a number of international commodity agreements, the purpose of which is to assist the flow of commodity trade between producer and consumer countries. The overall trend of prices is of course determined by the state of global supply and demand for individual commodities.

Air Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is currently granted by the Overseas Development Administration to help lower income signatory countries to implement action under (a) the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer and (b) the Geneva convention on long range transboundary air pollution.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On (a) I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 9 June.

On (b), the Government contribute about 5 per cent. to the United Nations budget which funds the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe which administers the long-range transboundary air pollution convention. In addition, the United Kingdom contributed about £63,000 direct to the convention trust fund in 1991. The United Kingdom also supports a number of research activities under the convention amounting to about £370,000 per annum.

Drainage Basins

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts are being made by the Overseas Development Administration to encourage the use of drainage basins as units for land and water management; and what support is granted towards the evaluation of the economic value of each basin's ecosystem.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We recognise the importance of drainage basins as units for land and water management. Research on catchment protection is a component of the ODA's renewable natural resources research strategy. The importance of catchments is also recognised in the ODA "Manual of Environmental Appraisal". The 1990-91 annual report on the RNRR strategy and the revised and updated "Manual of Environmental Appraisal" have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

While no specific work has been undertaken by ODA on the economic value of drainage basin ecosystems, the ODA commissioned work by the Overseas Development Institute, published in June 1991 as a book "Values for the Environment: A guide to Economic Appraisal" by J. T. Winpenny, which provides guidance on quantifying environmental costs and benefits of development projects. Copies of this book have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Development Programmes

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being undertaken by the Overseas Development Administration to improve planning integration of technical co-operation within overall and sectoral development programmes of recipient countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Technical co-operation, which comprises mainly the provision of British expertise overseas and the provision of training in the United Kingdom, is made available as an integral element of aid to projects, sector programmes and broader national development efforts. Effective integration of all forms of aid, including technical co-operation, from all donors is also sought by means of multi-donor co-ordination meetings with the authorities of individual recipient countries.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bass

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his French counterpart about the conservation of bass stocks.

Mr. Curry: No specific discussions have been recently held with the French. However when the EC minimum landing size for bass, introduced in 1990, was being negotiated, the Government discussed the issue with other member states as well as with the European Commission.

I am willing to take up any issue concerning fisheries conservation with any opposite numbers when there is clear evidence of cause for concern.

Under-sized Fish

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his French counterpart about the landing and sale of under-sized fish at channel ports and towns.

Mr. Curry: I raised this issue when we met earlier this month, and at the Council in Luxembourg on 9 June, when improving enforcement was a major item of discussion.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Luxembourg on 9 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I attended the Council of Fisheries Ministers in Luxembourg on 9 June 1992 together with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State, Scottish Office.

The Council continued its consideration of the mid-term review of the common fisheries policy. The Commission will now be preparing proposals for consideration during the next four months to implement improvements to the policy on better enforcement, measures to reduce discards and the development of fisheries management in the Mediterranean.

The Council accepted the need for improved enforcement by member states, and at the EC level, and asked the Commission to make urgent proposals for strengthening the powers of the Community inspectorate. The Council also recognised the importance and complexity of the problem of discards and asked the Commission to press ahead with the examination of ways of reducing them.

I urged the Council to follow the United Kingdom lead in introducing a one-net rule and announced that to achieve stronger co-operation between the national control authorities we have arranged a meeting for the principals of these authorities to take place in the United Kingdom during our presidency.

The Commission undertook to study the position of sole and whiting in the North sea, the southern North sea fishery and the application of a one-net rule in Community waters.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Policy

15. Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next intends to meet representatives of the European Commission to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Sainsbury: I will attend the meeting of the Industry Council on 17 June at which representatives of the European Commission will be present.

33. Mr. Patchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will next meet representatives of the Yorkshire and Humberside regional CBI to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Heseltine: I have no meetings planned with the Yorkshire and Humberside regional CBI in the immediate future.

34. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will next meet representatives of the south-east regional CBI to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Heseltine: I have no meetings planned with the CBI's south-east regional council in the immediate future.

Coal Privatisation

22. Mr. Ashton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with British Coal regarding the privatisation of the industry.

Mr. Eggar: I meet the chairman of British Coal on regular occasions and discuss a variety of issues.

23. Mr. Illsley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish his proposals for the privatisation of the mining industry.

Mr. Eggar: No decision has yet been taken on the form or timing of the Government's policy announcement on coal privatisation.

Privatisations (Competition)

24. Mr. Beith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has any plans to increase competition in industries which have been privatised.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government are committed to promoting competition throughout the economy. The telecommunications market is already open, and plans have been announced to increase the scope for competition in the markets for gas, electricity and water services.

Textile Industry

25. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from the textile industry in relation to the GATT talks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I and my officials are in regular contact with the textiles and clothing industry. We share its view that its best interests will be served by an early and successful conclusion to all aspects of the GATT Uruguay round, including the phase-out of the multi-fibre arrangement linked with strengthened rules and disciplines over international trading practices.

Regional Policy

26. Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for regional policy.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government remain committed to an effective, well-focused regional policy. I announced to the House yesterday a review of the United Kingdom assisted areas map.

Shark Products

27. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to ban the import of all shark products.

Mr. Needham: No. Sharks are not currently recognised as being endangered. If evidence were produced that any species of shark was becoming endangered, consideration could be given to controlling the trade under either the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) or the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976.

Shipbuilding

28. Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will make a statement on the state of the glass-reinforced plastic ship building industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: Two United Kingdom yards have the capability of building glass-reinforced plastic ships. One yard put its facility on a care and maintenance basis in 1984.

Due to reduced demand, the other yard is actively pursuing warship export orders and greater diversification into commercial activities.

Manufacturing Output

29. Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to boost manufacturing output.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our policies of reducing barriers to trade and enterprise will help British companies.

Cars

30. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on United Kingdom car production and new car sales.

Mr. Sainsbury: A total of 138,106 cars were sold in the United Kingdom in April, 9 per cent. more than in the same month last year. This is the first time since October 1989 that new car sales have been higher than the comparable month in the previous year, and clearly indicates that the market is recovering.

Colliery Manpower

31. Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal concerning future levels of colliery manpower after the expiry of the long-term bulk coal purchase contracts with National Power and PowerGen in April 1993.

Mr. Eggar: I look forward to continuing to meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Trade and Industrial Activity

32. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the Confederation of British Industry on matters relating to trade and industry activity.

Mr. Heseltine: I met representatives of the CBI and its National Manufacturing Council on 29 April and at the CBI annual dinner on 19 May. On both occasions we had a wide-ranging discussion on trade and industry matters.

Gas Turbine Generating Stations

35. Mr. Raynsford: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the number of applications before his Department for the construction of new combined-cycle gas turbine generating stations.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend is currently considering 12 applications for his consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 to construct new combined-cycle gas turbine generating stations.

Traditional Industries

36. Mr. Janner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will take steps to assist traditional industries in Leicester.

Mr. Sainsbury: The DTI already has in place a number of schemes that are helping companies in Leicester and elsewhere.

Consumer Credit

37. Mr. Merchant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made with his Department's consumer credit marketing proposals.

Mr. Leigh: The responses to the recent consultation have been examined and a number of possible modifications to the draft regulations are being considered.

Coal Imports

4. Mr. Stevenson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next proposes to meet the chairman of British Coal concerning the future level of coal imports.

Mr. Eggar: I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for ensuring that economic under-achievement criteria other than the present Department of Employment count or percentage unemployment rate are taken into account in reviewing assisted area status; and if he will list other appropriate criteria and the weight to be given to them.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the promised review of the assisted areas map will begin; and what criteria will be applied to judge each area's status.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 9 June, at the column 127.

Toxic Shock Syndrome

Ms. Richardson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to require manufacturers of tampons to publicise a warning about toxic shock syndrome on the outside of packets.

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to require manufacturers to put a warning about toxic shock syndrome on the outside of the packet. At the request of Government, manufacturers of tampons have improved the warning label on the outside of the packet and advise women to read and retain the leaflet on safety included in the packet. The leaflet warns the user about the risk of toxic shock syndrome, describes the symptoms and advises her to consult a doctor if they occur.

Fabric Safety

Mr. Fraser: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigations his Department has made into the safety of the fabric known as ramie.

Mr. Leigh: Ramie is a natural fibre that has long been used in clothing fabrics. If it is used to give a fluffy effect to the surface of the fabric, loose fibres can catch fire. However, the flammability of a garment can be reduced when other fibres are introduced.

My Department will be holding an early meeting with major clothing retailers to discuss what might be done about the marketing of potentially unsafe fashionwear.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many incidents of garments containing ramie catching fire have occurred in the past 18 months.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 June 1992]: Available statistics on clothing fires do not give information on the fibre content of the garments involved.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce safety standards for flammable materials in garments.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 June 1992]: My Department has commissioned an initial research project into the burning behaviour of fabrics, particularly those used in lightwear garments. This work will be presented to the British Standards Institution as a basis for the preparation of appropriate safety standards.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the plans he has to make progress on the draft directive on data protection and telecommunications in the period 1 July to 31 December; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Commission is at present considering its proposals in the light of the European Parliament's opinion, which was adopted on 13 March. The possibilities for progress on the directive will be considered once the Commission has submitted its revised proposal to the Council.

Maxwell Pensions

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if investigators from his Department will contact Dr. Werner Keicher in connection with the recovery of monies due to the Maxwell pension funds and their trustee companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: As my hon. Friend will now know, on 8 June the President of the Board of Trade announced that he had appointed Mr. J. L. Thomas QC and Mr. R. T. Turner FCA as inspectors under section 432(2) and 442 of the Companies Act 1985 to investigate and report on the affairs and membership of Mirror Group Newspapers plc. The inspectors have been asked to look in particular at the offers for sale of the company's shares in early 1991. How inspectors conduct their inquiry and whom they contact is a matter for them.

AAH Holdings plc

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his interim order under section 74 of the Fair Trading Act 1973 concerning AAH Holdings plc is due to expire; and whether he will extend the order.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Merger Situation (Medicopharma NV and AAH Holdings plc) (Interim Provision) Order 1992, which was made under section 89 of the Fair Trading Act 1973 on 7 May 1992, revoked the Merger Reference (Medicopharma NV and AAH Holdings plc) Order 1991 and the Merger Reference (Medicopharma NV and AAH Holdings plc) (Amendment) Order 1991, which had been made under section 74 of the Act. The effect of these earlier orders, limited to the Grampian and Highland regions, is reproduced in the new order. This new order has no expiry date.

Inward Investment

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he expects information about inward investment into the United Kingdom for 1991 to be made available;

(2) what was the regional breakdown of inward investment into the United Kingdom in 1990;

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of jobs safeguarded or created by inward investment in 1990;

(4) how many inward investment projects were begun in the United Kingdom in 1990, 1989 and 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information about inward investment into the United Kingdom for the financial year 1991-92 has yet to be finalised and will be announced in my Department's Invest in Britain bureau's annual report.

A regional breakdown showing the number of projects notified to the IBB and the number of jobs created and safeguarded for the period 1 January 1990 to 31 March 1991 is in the table, together with the same information for the calendar years 1988 and 1989.

The decisions recorded include the establishment of new business, expansion or acquisition of an existing business and involvement in a joint venture. These figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves at the time of the investment and take no account of subsequent developments.

Telecommunications

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which operators will be required to comply with the telecommunications provisions of the Competition and Service (Utilities) Act 1992.

Mr. Leigh: The Competition and Service (Utilities) Act 1992 will apply only to those telecommunication operators which have been designated under the provisions of section 10. The power to designate can be exercised only if the President is satisfied that the operator provides at least 25 per cent. of the voice telephony services supplied within the area in relation to which he is a public telecommunications operator. Only BT and Kingston Communications (Hull) plc meet that criterion and I have signed an order today so designating them.

South Africa (Oil)

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if exports of crude oil from the United Kingdom continental shelf will be permited to South Africa following the EC's decision to lift its embargo; and whether United Kingdom companies can now ship oil of other origin to South Africa.

Mr. Eggar: Following the decision taken by EC Ministers on 6 April 1992 to lift the EC embargo on oil movements to South Africa there are no restrictions imposed by the Government on United Kingdom companies exporting oil to South Africa either from the United Kingdom continental shelf or elsewhere.

Staff Salaries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the cause of the corruption that occurred to hon. Members' staff salaries for the month of May.

Mr. Newton: The corruption of the Members' staff computer payroll records for the month of May was a direct result of operator procedural error at a time of extreme pressure. It did not originate from a computer virus nor from unauthorised access to the computer system or records held in the Fees Office.

I am assured that all possible steps are being taken to prevent a repetition of the error.

SCOTLAND

Hardy Nursery Stock

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the development of the hardy nursery stock industry in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish Office agriculture and fisheries department provides general encouragement for the hardy nursery stock industry in Scotland which is demonstrating steady and welcome development as regards range and quality of products and market expansion.

Population Statistics

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the population of (a) Orkney, (b) Shetland, (c) Islay, (d) Jura, (e) Colonsay and (f) Mull; how many people are considered to be economically active on each of these islands.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Figures from the 1991 census of population are not yet available. The most recent figures are from the 1981 census and are given in the table.

Area	Residents	Residents economically active
Orkney	18,425	8,156
Shetland	22,768	10,957
Colonsay	134	57
Islay	3,792	1,636
Jura	224	97
Mull	2,196	963

Hospices

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the development of the hospice movement in Scotland; what plans he has to encourage this development; and what criteria he applies to the award of financial assistance to individual hospices.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The 13 voluntary hospices in Scotland have benefited over the past three years from the Government's scheme under which at least 50 per cent. of their running costs have been met by health boards. This initiative, which runs until the end of the current financial year, was designed as a transitional measure to enable the hospices and health boards to work together to construct a sound basis for contractual relationships and future development. Its effectiveness and possible future arrangements are now being assessed by the Scottish Office home and health department. Views have been sought from each voluntary hospice and each health board with a hospice in its area. We shall make known the outcome of this assessment when it has been completed.

The main criteria which a hospice must satisfy in order to be eligible for assistance under the initiative are:

—the hospice must be recognised as a charity by the Inland Revenue;

—services must be provided to meet the needs of terminally ill patients (and their families) when those needs can no longer be met by curative treatments;

—medical, nursing and paramedical staff should be employed, who are skilled in the provision of palliative medicine for cancer patients, and for others who require such expert care for a span of time; and —no charge should be made to patients or their families.

Homelessness

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the Scottish Council for Single Homeless to discuss the homelessness crisis in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no immediate plans for such a meeting, but my officials meet representatives of the council on a regular basis.

Placentas

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the supply of placentas by the national health service to (a) national health service and university research departments and (b) private companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Arrangements for the supply of placentae from NHS hospitals to research departments of the NHS and universities or private companies are the responsibility of individual health boards. Information on the disposal of placentae is not held centrally.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has given to health boards on the disposal of placentas after childbirth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Placentae are regarded as clinical waste. Guidance produced by the Health and Safety Commission and issued to health boards in June 1982 by the Scottish home and health department requires that placentae should be placed in a suitable bag or bin and incinerated.

Arthritis Care

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the Arhtritis Care organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister for Health in Scotland plans to attend the reception which Arthritis Care has arranged at the House of Commons for 26 November 1992.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The responses to the consultation paper "Competing for Quality: Competition in the Provision of Local Services" are being carefully considered. Announcements will be made in due course about the proposals for extending the list of activities subject to the compulsory competition provisions of the Local Government Act 1988, and on the timetable for implementation.

Members of the European Parliament

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last formally and collectively met Members of the European Parliament representing Scottish constituencies; when he next plans to meet them; what matters he hopes to discuss; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Secretary of State last formally and collectively met Members of the European Parliament representing Scottish constituencies on 9 July 1991. There are no immediate plans for a further such meeting.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the most recent percentage of the population which is (a) under 16 years, (b) 16 to 24 years, (c) 25 to 34 years, (d) 35 to pensionable age and (e) pensionable age in (i) the Paisley, South parliamentary constituency, (ii) Strathclyde region and (iii) Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Annual population estimates by age are not made for parliamentary constituencies. The most recent figures are from the 1981 census of population and are given in the table.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not collected centrally on the number of rapes reported to the police. The available information on the number of rapes recorded by the police is as follows:

Maedi Visna

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current incidence of Maedi Visna in Scotland; and what steps the Government intend to take to limit the spread of Maedi Visna.

Sir Hector Monro: Maedi Visna is not statutorily notifiable; but one outbreak has been reported, in a flock which was brought into Scotland in 1990. Under the sheep and goat health scheme flock owners may have their flocks tested annually for maedi visna, or may achieve and maintain maedi visna accredited status. The scheme is regularly publicised at markets and shows; and following the recent outbreak the Scottish Agricultural college has advised veterinarians in private practice to be alert for evidence of the disease.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Government have plans to make Maedi Visna a statutorily notifiable disease within the terms of the Animal Health Act 1981.

Sir Hector Monro: No.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the findings of the Maedi Visna/Caprine arthritis-encephalitis programmes carried out by the Agriculture and Fisheries Department.

Sir Hector Monro: In the year ending 31 March 1992, 20,157 samples were taken from flocks in the sheep and goat health scheme in Scotland, and only one positive reactor was found.

Waste Collection

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the provision of specific financial assistance to local authorities which wish to establish or develop efficient collection and recycling of industrial, commercial and domestic waste.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 June 1992]: I have no plans for specific grant to authorities for recycling nor to specify that elements of capital spending consents may be used only to finance recycling initiatives. To do so would constrain the freedom enjoyed by local authorities to determine their own spending priorities. Recycling projects identified in authorities' expenditure plans are taken into account when setting the capital expenditure allocations each year.

Shellfish

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the forum on nephrops, to be convened by the chairman of the Sea Fish Industry Authority, is expected to meet before the summer recess.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 June 1992]: The arrangements for the nephrops forum are being made by the Sea Fish Industry Authority. I understand that the forum is to be held on Friday, 31 July.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what surveys of the quality of Scottish coastal waters in respect of meeting EC standard on shellfish production have been made by DAFS; and whether he will make the findings available.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 June 1992]: The classification of shellfish harvesting areas to meet the requirements of EC directive 91/492 is being undertaken by my Department's marine laboratory in Aberdeen. The exercise involves establishing the level of bacteriological contamination present in samples of shellfish flesh taken from harvesting areas.

Decisions on classification will be taken later in the year but information on the results so far will be issued to interested parties this month. Thus far the results have been encouraging with some 70 per cent. of results indicating category A, with 20 per cent. suggesting category B and the remainder in category C. But these are early days and some deterioration in the results over the coming months may occur linked to changing conditions.

Environmental Issues

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the documents or projects produced by his Department to be used in schools to raise the awareness of pupils on environmental issues; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 June 1992]: The provision of material for use in schools is primarily a matter for education authorities. The following documents dealing with environmental education have recently been made available to education authorities by the Scottish Office.

This Common Inheritance; A Summary of the White Paper on the Environment (Command 1200) (October 1990).

Environmental Studies 5-14; SOED Working Paper No. 13 (December 1991).

Environment in Trust: a series of leaflets covering: river quality; global atmosphere and air quality; radioactive waste management—A Safe Solution; pollution control systems; One World; Cleaner Seas; The Countryside; and Waste Management and Recycling (February 1992).

The primary education development project has developed materials which it is intended to make available to support the delivery of environmental studies 5-14, and Scotland is currently participating in an OECD project on environmental education which will result in further materials for use in schools.

In addition a working group under the chairmanship of Professor Smyth is currently reviewing the provision of environmental education generally in Scotland. Its findings are expected later this year.

East Kilbride DC

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details of the arrangements for the sale of individual assets held by East Kilbride development corporation in the value range £250,000 to £4 million.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 8 June 1992]: The arrangements for the disposal of the assets of the new town development corporations in Scotland are set out in guidance issued by The Scottish Office industry department in April. A copy of the guidance was sent to the hon. Member on 19 May 1992.

EMPLOYMENT

Small Shops

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received from OPEN, the small shops group about the consequences of the unamended working time directive for small convenience stores in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My predecessors received representations from OPEN about the proposed provisions in the draft directive on working time which would make Sunday a rest day in principle. At the Council of Social Ministers on 30 April there was general acceptance that any provision in the draft directive on the principle of Sunday rest should not be obligatory in its effect on member states. Negotiations are continuing on these issues.

Training

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment of every 100 people who join employment training, how many will be expected to obtain a job at the end of their training; and what is the figure for a similar number of people who do not join employment training but who are unemployed for the same period.

Mr. McLoughlin: Currently, for every 100 people who join ET, 33 are in employment or self employment three months after leaving. Comparable figures are not available for the unemployed who do not enter ET.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if it is her policy that youth training and employment training trainees be issued with a copy of their individual training plan before they commence training or on request; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Under the terms of the training and enterprise councils' operating agreement, TECs must ensure that all persons entering YT or ET are given an individual training plan agreed between the training provider and the trainee, either immediately upon entry or within a week of such entry. The issued document must contain specified information about the trainee and the training programme. The plan plays a key role in defining training intentions and trainee rights. It is also a fundamental requirement in financial control that training providers should keep a properly completed and up-to-date copy of each plan to support claims for payment. The existence of such a plan is normally regarded as a test for a trainee being recognised as a YT or ET trainee.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for what reasons he decided to reduce the TVEI budget allocated to Staffordshire for 1992-93 from that allocated for 1991-92; what assessment he has made of the effects of this reduced allocation; and if he will now reinstate the 1992-93 allocation to the 1991-92 level.

Mr. McLoughlin: Staffordshire's TVEI budget for 1992-93 has not been reduced. When Staffordshire started its TVEI extension programme in 1988 a phased allocation of the total available funds was agreed with the Department. This was weighted towards the early years when the major changes would be introduced. The planned budget for 1992-93 still applies, apart from the usual annual uprating of 2·5 per cent.

Job Search Seminars

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the role, purpose and cost of job search seminars and which unemployed people are eligible for their assistance for Great Britain and for each region; how many job search seminars have been established;how many people have been helped by those seminars; how many people have been directly placed into jobs; how many have been directly placed in other outcomes; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what is the role, purpose and cost of job referral teams and which unemployed people are eligible for their assistance and for Great Britain and for each region (a) how many job referral teams have been established, (b) how many people have been helped by those teams, (c) how many people have been directly placed into jobs and (d) how many have been directly placed in other outcomes; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what is the role, purpose and cost of job review workshops and which unemployed people are eligible for their assistance and for Great Britain and for each region (a) how many job review workshops have been established, (b) how many people have been helped by those workshops, (c) how many people have been directly placed into jobs and (d) how many have been directly placed in other outcomes; and if she will make a statement;

(4) for Great Britain and for each region how many people have been called in to attend 13-week Employment Service counselling interviews; how many people have actually attended such interviews; and of those who attended (a) how many have been placed directly into jobs, (b) how many people have been placed in what other outcomes and (c) how many have had their benefit stopped or suspended and for what reasons; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred these questions for reply.

Northgate Complex, Glasgow

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list by Department the number of working days that have been lost so far this year at the Northgate complex, Milton street, Glasgow, due to problems with the air conditioning system; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive has no knowledge of any working days lost this year at the Northgate complex, Milton street, Glasgow due to problems with the air conditioning systems.

Sheep Dip

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the recommended protective clothing to be worn when using organo-phosphorous sheep dip; what changes have been made to these recommendations in the last year; and what changes are planned.

Mr. McLoughlin: Advice on protective clothing is given on the label and data sheet of individual products. General information is also available in the free leaflet "Sheep dipping: Protect your health" published by the Health and Safety Executive and available from their local offices.

The leaflet advises that personal protective equipment should include rubber gloves, coverall and a face-shield when handling the concentrate and rubber boots, rubber gloves and waterproof coat or bib apron when handling the diluted liquid and freshly dipped sheep. Sheep dip manufacturers and personal protective equipment suppliers can provide more specific advice.

There have been no changes in the last year to these recommendations, nor are any planned. The Veterinary Products Committee is, however, reviewing the licences for sheep dip products and will be considering personal protective equipment requirements in formulating its advice to the licensing authority.

I will arrange for copies of the leaflet to be placed in the Library.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of her Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the Employment department group instructions have been issued that the Data Protection Registrar should be consulted on proposed legislation which might affect, or be affected by, the Data Protection Act. Such proposals and other planned initiatives are notified to the data protection co-ordinator who consults the Data Protection Registrar as appropriate.

HEALTH

Bowel Complaints

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are given to general practitioners about performing rectal examinations on patients with bowel complaints.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for the profession to issue guidance on such clinical matters as appropriate.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State if she will list by regional health authority the average current delay between patients reporting (a) symptoms starting and (b) diagnosis of a patient with inflammatory bowel disorder.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the guidance which the Department of Health has received on the potential value of a ban on tobacco advertising.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has received guidance on the potential effect of a ban on tobacco advertising from a number of sources. The Department is currently undertaking a study on the effects of tobacco advertising on tobacco consumption. The contents of this study will be made available in an appropriate form when it is completed.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the Cambridge regional health authority are waiting more than six months for a first time referral to a consultant.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not collected in the form requested. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Colin Walker, chairman of East Anglian regional health authority, or Richard King, chairman of Cambridge Health Authority, for details.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the last year in the number of patients waiting over two years for hospital treatment.

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to the reply, 12 May 1992, c. 489-92]: Provisional waiting time figures as at 30 April are given in the table. These show that the number of patients waiting more than two years for treatment increased in April by 399 to 1,999. This compares with 51,100 patients at 31 March 1991. Regional general managers have been told to take firm management action to ensure these patients are treated as soon as possible and that the rapid fall in waiting times achieved in 1991-92 is continued.

Community Care

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if her Department's estimates of the cost of housing provision necessary to meet the requirements of the Government's community care plans and the implementation of the Children Act 1989, identify separately the respective costs of (a) the provision, management and maintenance of the accommodation, (b) services directly related to the provision of accommodation, (c) personal services, including the provision of food, heating, lighting and laundry services, (d) care and support services, including medical and social care, counselling, social work support, skills training and therapy and (e) any other requirements;

(2) what are her Department's estimates of the cost of the housing requirements arising from the Government's community care plans and the implementation of the Children Act 1989 for each of (a) people with mental health problems, (b) people with learning difficulties, (c) young people leaving care or who are homeless, (d) elderly people, (e) people with drug or alcohol abuse problems, (f) people with physical disabilities including degenerative and debilitating illnesses and (g) other client groups falling within the statutory provisions of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 and the Children Act 1989 in each of the three years from 1993-94 onwards.

Mr. Yeo: The Government do not have estimates broken down in the way requested.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions she is making to fund care in the community in the county of Durham; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The personal social services standard spending assessment for county Durham in 1992-93 is £53·3 million. The county council is responsible for determining its social services priorities and how much is to be spent on community care. Similarly, the relevant health authorities are responsible for deciding how much should be spent on community health services from within their general allocations determined by the regional health authority. Announcements about the funding of community care in 1993-94 will be made in the context of this year's local government expenditure survey.

Health Education

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current level of expenditure on health education; and what it was in 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not possible to calculate overall expenditure on health education because so much health service activity includes both explicit and implicit health education whose costs cannot be separately identified.

The allocation made to the Health Education Authority for health education in England for 1992-93 is nearly £34 million. In 1979-80 the expenditure on health education in England, Wales and Northern Ireland by the Health Education Council was £4·5 million.

The Department also provides funding under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 to a large number of voluntary bodies, many of which undertake health education as part of their overall role.

Childhood Asthma

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out, or is currently being carried out, to see if gas ozone may be an integrated factor in childhood asthma; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We attach particular importance to maintaining the improvements made in child health and are concerned by the increase in reported cases of childhood asthma.

In 1990 an advisory group was convened by the chief medical officer to look at the short-term health effects of exposure to specific air pollutants. Its first report—"Ozone" (published by HMSO in August 1991)—found that there was no conclusive evidence to show that exposure to ozone or other air pollutants at levels occurring in the United Kingdom cause people to become asthmatic, but recommended that there should be further research. A copy of the report is available in the Library.

The Department has raised this with the Medical Research Council; the main agency which supports biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom and which in 1990-91—the latest year for which figures are available—spent £1 million on research into asthma. We have also set up a further advisory committee with a wider remit to co-ordinate work on the assessment of the effects of exposure to air pollutants on health.

Investigation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what limitations there are on where a medical general practitioner may send patients to hospitals for investigation and treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have always made clear that GPs are free to refer their patients to whichever hospital or other unit best meets the needs of the patient. We remain committed to this principle.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she proposes to issue new guidelines and regulations for hygiene training for food handlers arising from the Food Safety Act 1990; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Government are currently considering what the scope of the regulations should be and expect to bring forward proposals later this year.

Patients Charter

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will arrange for an additional right to be added to the patients charter in respect of waitintg times for a first out-patient appointment.

Mr. Sackville: The patients charter already requires that local standards are set for waiting times for first out-patient appointments. We will consider looking at the possibility of extending these to a national level.

Purchasing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which district health authorities in England and Wales have entered into a purchasing consortium arrangement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally. I understand that a number of district health authorities have entered into purchasing consortium arrangements. The latest information available, which reflects the situation up to May 1992, is set out in the table. The list does not include districts that have merged formally or those that have reached informal agreements to purchase particular services. For more up-to-date information the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the regional health authorities concerned. The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Incontinence Pads

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances incontinence pads can be supplied against a prescription.

Dr. Mawhinney: Incontinence pads are provided by the hospital and community health services free of charge to NHS patients. They may not be prescribed by general practitioners.

Children's Homes, Staffordshire

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish the social services inspectorate's report of the inspection of children's homes in Staffordshire.

Mr. Yeo: The report is being published today. Copies are available in the Library. The report is clear that some important improvements have been made in the quality of service and the management of children's homes. No evidence was found of practices similar to "pindown". It is also clear, however, that some recommendations from the previous inspection in 1990 have not been implemented fully and some standards of care remain unacceptable. I have asked Staffordshire county council to produce a detailed action plan to deal with those matters requiring urgent attention and the social services inspectorate will continue to work closely with the council to ensure that the appropriate action is taken.

Dentistry

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what would be the average gross earnings from the national health service of a dentist if her proposals on dental fees submitted to the dental rates study group are implemented.

Dr. Mawhinney: We estimate £89,300 per dentist.

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of dentists earned a gross income of over £100,000 in 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1991-92, 34·8 per cent. of dentists earned a gross NHS income of over £100,000.

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will state, in the last three years for which data are available, (a) the actual level of dentists' expenses and (b) the figure allowed for by the dental rates study group.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90, the last three years for which data are available, the dental rates study group forecast a level of practice expenses above the actual outturn by £1,851, or 5·5 per cent., £1,650, or 4·5 per cent., and £1,678, or 4·3 per cent. respectively.

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of expenses she has proposed to the dental rates study group for dentists in 1992-93; and what was the figure in 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: The sum of £47,228 per dentist, an increase of 11·6 per cent. over that allowed for in 1991-92.

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how average dentists' pay has changed since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since 1979-80, the target average net income of dentists has increased from £11,128 to £35,815 in the current year, a real terms increase of nearly 33 per cent. Our latest proposals are likely to exceed £35,815 by about £5,000, which would mean a real terms increase of about 51 per cent.

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the Doctors and Dentists Review Body recommendation for the increase in dentists' income in 1992-93 over 1991-92; and what were the corresponding awards to doctors and nurses.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Doctors and Dentists Review Body's recommendation, which the Government accepted in full, increases dentists' pay for 1992-93 by 8·5 per cent. This is the biggest increase for any large group of NHS staff. Doctors—general medical practitioners—were awarded 5·5 per cent. and nurses and midwives 5·8 per cent.

Warrington General Hospital

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) the amount of over or under spending in each of the last five years and (b) the throughput of patients over each of the last five years at Warrington general hospital.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. Hannah, the chairman of Warrington health authority, for details.

NHS Management Bonuses

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the range of financial bonuses available to (a) general and (b) senior managers in the national health service;

(2) if she will list the criteria used in deciding whether a general or senior manager in the national health service should receive a financial bonus;

(3) under what circumstances general and senior managers within the national health service may earn financial bonuses in addition to their basic salaries.

Dr. Mawhinney: Financial bonuses may be paid to individual general and senior managers in the national health service on the basis of good performance, depending upon the degree to which they meet agreed objectives decided and set locally by their employing authority. In general, payments are based on a proportion of basic salary and can be up to 8 per cent. per annum for general and 6 per cent. per annum for senior managers —subject to cumulative limits.

Ethnic Minorities

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital consultants employed by the Northern regional health authority are members of ethnic minorities; and how many of these are holders of merits awards.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether her Department records the ethnic origin of hospital consultants who hold merit awards; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Merit Awards

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken towards publishing background information and material defining the basis upon which individual consultants are awarded merit.

Dr. Mawhinney: The leaflet "Consultants' Distinction Awards" was issued in October 1990 to help consultants and managers understand how the National Health Service distinction and meritorious service award scheme works in England and Wales. A copy is available in the Library.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current value of merit awards to the national health service and to North West Durham health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1990-91, the last year for which complete figures are available, £41,370,322 was paid in distinction awards to consultants in the national health service in England and £31,127 in North West Durham health authority.

North Durham Hospital

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has made to the proposals for the siting of the new North Durham hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: North Durham district health authority and Northern regional health authority are currently considering a number of options for replacing the general hospitals at Dryburn and Shotley Bridge. No formal approach has yet been made by the Northern regional health authority to seek the approval in principle of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for any particular proposal.

Child Care

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the response to the European Council of Ministers' recommendation on child care; and when she intends to draw the recommendation to the attention of local authorities, employers business interests, childcare providers and voluntary organisations.

Mr. Yeo: Article 7 of the Council recommendation requires a response by no later than March 1995. We will be discussing how to carry out this work with other Government Departments. It will be drawn to the attention of other interested parties during the coming months.

Tomlinson Report

Mrs. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the Tomlinson report on health services in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Bernard Tomlinson and his team are due to report to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health and for Education in the autumn. The report will be published shortly afterwards.

South East Thames RHA

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will intervene under regulation 19(4)(b) of the Community Health Council Regulations 1974 (as amended) to require South East Thames regional health authority to carry out further consultations on its capital strategy, "Investing for Excellence in Health."

Mr. Sackville: No. I am satisfied that South East Thames regional health authority has acted properly in this matter.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Heveningham Hall

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his policy towards Heveningham hall.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, when he was responsible for this matter as the Secretary of State for the Environment, decided on 10 December 1991 not to exercise his right to purchase Heveningham hall. I fully share his view about the outstanding importance of this grade I building and the need to maintain the integrity of the house, its decorative scheme and the grounds, and firmly believe that these objectives should be met, where possible, by responsible private ownership. It is for the official receivers to explore this possibility and I understand that they intend to market the hall later this summer. The hall will remain subject to the full rigour of planning and listed building controls and to advice from English Heritage and the local planning authorities. The costs of restoration work to the house and the grounds which is still outstanding should be well within the financial capacity of a new owner.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much is being spent on sport by his Department, compared with May 1979, in real and cash terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My Department is responsible for grant in aid to the Sports Council (GB). The table shows that there has been a significant increase in grant in aid to the council in both real and cash terms.

Grant in aid to the Sports Council (Great Britain)

£ million

Year	Cash	At 1992-93 prices
1992-93	48·762	48·762

In addition to this, a new business sponsorship scheme for sport, which will provide £3 million per annum for sport in England, is to be established this year.

A further £55 million, to be channelled through the Department of the Environment, has been committed to sport in support of the Manchester Olympic bid. Government funding for sport is also provided through unhypothecated revenue support grant to local authorities and the Department of the Environment's inner-city programmes. The three territorial sports councils also receive grant in aid from their respective sponsoring Departments.

By reducing the rate of pool betting duty, an extra £60 million per annum has been made available to sport through the Foundation for Sport and the Arts and the Football Trust.

Government Auctions Directory

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning national press advertisements placed by City Trading Ltd. for a publication described as the Official Directory of Government Auctions; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: None. Several Government Departments use actions for the occasional disposal of goods and each Department makes its own arrangements. There is no official directory of Government auctions.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has held with the Data Protection Registrar with respect to the integration of the existing system customs enforcement network or customs information system within the European Community; whether the system forms part of the Schengen or Trevi arrangements; and whether he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have consulted the Data Protection Registrar on several occasions during the development of a Community-wide customs information system, an enhancement of the current system customs enforcement network. The system does not form part of either the Schengen or Trevi arrangements.

Companies (Financial Regulations)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessments the Government have made of the impact and additional costs on companies after 1993 of the additional requirements for (a) VAT returns, (b) INTRASTAT, (c) appointment of fiscal agents and (d) the United Kingdom's adoption of the maximum limit of £70,000 for fiscal agents.

Sir John Cope: The abolition of routine and systematic formalities at internal frontiers after 1992 means that, overall, United Kingdom industry will benefit from a reduction in business compliance costs incurred currently in intra-EC trade.

Compliance cost assessments—CCA—have not been produced for individual single market requirements owing to difficulties in identifying the different elements of the costs associated with a single administrative document.

Some of the new requirements have only recently been agreed and Customs and Excise are now in the course of preparing a global CCA covering indirect tax, statistical and customs issues.

Drug Imports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will arrange for (a) Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to carry out sampling of all imports of drugs as a matter of routine and (b) all drug imports to have documentation certifying their manufacture; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise check imports of drugs on behalf of the Department of Health's Medicines Control Agency. Where appropriate these checks include sampling. Routine sampling and extended documentary requirements for all consignments, however, are not considered necessary by the agency. Testing is also carried out to the agency's standards in the country of origin or after importation.

Debtor Countries

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made towards the complete write-off of official debts of lower income countries to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: To date, five countries have benefited from the Prime Minister's Trinidad terms debt reduction initiative—Benin, Bolivia, Equatorial Guinea, Nicaragua, and Tanzania. A number of other heavily indebted, low-income countries are expected to receive Trinidad terms in the coming months. Under current Trinidad terms agreements, 50 per cent. of eligible debt is written off, and creditors commit to consider reducing the whole stock of debt in three to four years' time if the debtor country keeps to its agreements with the International Monetary Fund and the Paris club. The Government also participated in a Paris club agreement in 1991 to write off 50 per cent. of the whole stock of Egypt's official bilateral debt.

The Government believe that Trinidad terms should be further developed, along the lines of the Prime Minister's original proposals for the poorest and most heavily indebted countries—all creditors should participate in debt reduction, debt reduction should be increased from 50 per cent. to a benchmark of two thirds, and debt stock reductions should be brought forward. While the Government do not believe that it is necessary, or in the long-term interests of the debtors themselves, to write off their debts completely, the Overseas Development Administration has cancelled most of the debt of the poorest countries arising from aid loans.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to look at the feasibility of debt-for-nature swaps as a part of the debt retirement process

Mr. Nelson: The Government welcome debt-for-nature swaps as an innovative approach to market-based debt reduction in cases where additional resources are made available for environmental projects. As far as the Government's own programmes are concerned, we have to date judged it more effective to deal with debt relief and assistance for environmental projects overseas separately, through the Paris club and through our aid programme.

Company Writs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement as to why writs issued by his Department last December to financial advisers concerning James Ferguson Holdings of Bradford had not been served within the four-month time limit;

(2) how many Yorkshire and Humberside-based companies face being sued by his Department in connection with the Barlow Clowes affair.

Mr. Nelson: I cannot comment on individual cases.

Manufactured Exports

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much manufactured exports have changed between 1981 and 1991.

Mr. Portillo: The value of UK exports of manufactures was £86 billion in 1991, £51 billion more than in 1981.

Overseas Postings (Housing)

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assistance with regard to housing costs is provided for civil servants posted overseas.

Mr. Dorrell: Civil servants posted overseas are provided with rent-free accommodation appropriate to their grade or status.

Auditing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those non-departmental public bodies which are annually and comprehensively audited (a) by the National Audit Office and (b) by private firms of accountants; if he will list the criteria on which such accountants are selected and for what length of time they are appointed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Treasury does not maintain a central list of the auditors of non-departmental public bodies. The publication "Public Bodies 1991" prepared by the Cabinet Office lists the non-departmental public bodies by sponsoring department and indicates those executive bodies which are subject to audit by the Comptroller and Auditor General. The legislation governing the individual bodies will normally determine whether the Comptroller and Auditor General is the statutory auditor or whether a firm of accountants is to be appointed. In the latter case, the appointment is normally the responsibility of the sponsoring Department.

Tax Statistics

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount, in cash, the bottom quintile of households, ranked by unadjusted disposable income, paid out in income tax; and what they paid out in value added tax in 1989.

Sir John Cope: In 1989, the average payments for households in the bottom quintile ranked by unadjusted disposable income were about £95 in income tax, and £270 in VAT.

Greyhound Racing

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what agreement has been reached with the British Greyhound Racing Board and the off-course betting industry on how the allocation of greyhound racing's proportion of the 0·25 per cent. reduction in general betting duty will be administered;

(2) what is his estimate of the proportion of the £15 million resulting from the reduction in general betting duty in 1992-93 which would be returned to greyhound racing.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The size and administration of any voluntary payments by bookmakers to greyhound racing following the reduction in general betting duty are matters for negotiation between the two industries. We understand that those negotiations are under way and have asked to be informed of the outcome in due course.

GDP Growth

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for gross domestic product growth in 1992.

Mr. Portillo: At Budget time the Chancellor forecast that GDP would grow by 1 per cent. in 1992.

TRANSPORT

Rail Electrification

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about funding arrangements relating to the acquisition of rolling stock for the Leeds-Bradford rail electrification project.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 9 June, at column 116.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department's officials are aware of the need to consult the registrar at the appropriate stage of any initiative involving personal data, to establish whether there will be a need for registration. It is the practice to remind directorates from time to time of their responsibilities under the Act. I am satisfied that these arrangements are effective.

Road Closures, Blackheath

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he is likely to come to a decision with regard to the minor road closures in and around Blackheath.

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State for Transport has received an application from the London borough of Lewisham to stop up lengths of London Pond road, Whitfield road and Duke Humphrey road. The borough council has been asked to provide further information relating to the application. The Secretary of State is unable to decide upon the application until this information has been received.

Greater Manchester Buses

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the consultants' report into the possible splitting of Greater Manchester Buses Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have received the consultants' report into the possible splitting of Greater Manchester Buses Ltd. It is now being carefully considered. I propose to discuss the report with the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority.

British Rail (Finance)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the level of Government investment in British Rail provided in (a) million pounds, (b) the amount needed to equal the 1979 allocation in real terms and (c) the percentage excess or shortfall compared to the 1979 allocation in real terms; and if he will provide a breakdown by the following (i) investment ceiling, (ii) total investment by BR and subsidiaries and (iii) railways for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 8 June 1992]: British Rail's investment ceiling for 1992-93 is currently set at £983 million for the existing railway and at £755 million for the new railway. The combined ceiling for both existing and new railways therefore stands at £1,738 million. Rail investment by BR in 1979 was £620 million in 1992-93 prices. The ceiling for 1992-93 therefore represents an increase of 180 per cent. on the figure for 1979.

The annual breakdown by investment ceiling, total investment and rail investment appears in the table.

British Rail Investment 1979 to 1991-92
£ million in 1992-93 prices

	Investment Ceiling	Group Investment	Rail Investment
1979	n/a	n/a	620

1991-92	1,202	n/a	1,045

Notes:
1. Rail investment excludes non-rail business such as BR Property Board, ships and hotels.
2. 1984-85 was a 15-month period. The figure given is a 12-month equivalent.
3. The figure for rail investment for 1991-92 is a DTp estimate.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how reports of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are disseminated within his Department.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Reports prepared by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are always shown to the permanent secretary and seen by the Department's senior managers. Where necessary, local managers are asked to comment on the matters raised by the Parliamentary Commissioner.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many investigations have been initiated by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in connection with the work of his Department for each year since 1986; and how many complaints have been upheld in whole or in part in each of those years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration was extended on 1 January 1991 by section 110 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 to include administrative duties carried out by staff of courts and tribunals appointed by the Lord Chancellor.

Three cases had been referred to the Parliamentary Commissioner in 1986; one in 1987; seven in 1988; eight in 1989, and three in 1990 of which it was decided 14 fell outside his jurisdiction. The remaining seven did not result in recommendations. In 1991, nine cases were investigated of which five resulted in findings against the Department. During 1992 three cases have been referred to the Parliamentary Commissioner, but none of those investigations has yet been completed.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what disciplinary action has been taken by his Department in relation to matters referred to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in each year since 1986.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No disciplinary action has been found necessary as the result of a case being referred to the Parliamentary Commission for Administration during the period from 1986.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for each year since 1986 in respect of the reports of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration where financial payment or payments will or should be made by his Department as directed or indicated, (a) aggregate amount for all investigations, (b) the highest amounts for any one investigation, (c) the length of time taken between his Department indicating that a payment will be made or informing that a payment should be made and such payments being made and (d) how many such payments were not made within seven days and what reasons there are for such delays.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No payments were recommended by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in the years 1986, 1987, 1988, 1990 and 1992. In 1989 one payment of £75 was made and in 1991 payments totalling £1,467·61 were made. The largest of these payments was £1,009·42.

The time taken between acknowledging the Parliamentary Commissioner's recommendation and making payment is kept to a minimum.

Northern Circuit

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary Lord Chancellor's Department what costs were incurred in (a) court fees, (b) counsel fees, (c) agents, (d) expense rates, (e) charging rate, (f) additional costs and (g) total claimed by any solicitor or the Treasury Solicitor, in relation to matters involving the administration of the courts on the northern circuit, the northern circuit administrator or members of his staff in each year since 1986.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information in the form requested could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions solicitors or the Treasury Solicitor have been instructed to advise or act for his Department, and by whom, in respect of matters relating to the northern circuit administrator, his staff or any matter involving the administration of the courts on the northern circuit, in each year since 1986.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not collected in the form requested and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Vehicle Clamping

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the number of vehicles clamped by private companies operating under the jurisdiction of the police in each of the last three years for which complete figures are available; and what payments were made to the companies.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the commissioner that the information requested is as follows:

Financial year	Clamps applied	Total payment £
1989-90	157,401	1,680,289
1990-91	149,766	1,512,093
1991-92	128,079	1,322,155

Prisons Reports

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each of the last five years the date on which he received each report from his inspector of prisons and the date on which each report was published.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details covering the last five years can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The dates of all reports delivered to the Secretary of State from January 1991 are given in the tables.

Prevention of Terrorism

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were (a) the number and length of detentions in Britain under the Prevention of Terrorism Acts since 1 January and (b) the number and length of detentions in Greater Manchester since 1 January.

Mr. Jack: Statistics on the number of people detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 in Great Britain during the first quarter of 1992 are published in "Home Office Statistical Bulletin 9/92". A copy of this bulletin is in the Library. Details of the length of detentions for all detainees from 1 January to 9 June are given in the table:

Carriers' Liability

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total sum of fines issued to carriers since the introduction of the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987; and what is the total in outstanding fines.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The total sum is £44·01 million, of which £21·78 million is outstanding.

Housing Services for the Elderly

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make arrangements for Housing Services for the Elderly to have free access to fire control ex-directory telephone numbers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have no reason to believe that the current arrangements whereby emergency telephone calls are routed through the public telephone operators are unsatisfactory. Exceptionally, fire control ex-directory numbers may be made available by a chief fire officer to high-risk establishments and to emergency alarm receiving companies at their expense in order to receive calls directly in the brigade area.

Prisoners

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures for the total number of prisoners held in HMP Nottingham in 1979 and in each following year until 1992; and what category of prisoner they were.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The readily available information is given in the table. The population has been taken as at 31 March for each of the years requested in order to include the latest figures for 1992. All inmates held were in the category adult sentenced males.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of self-inflicted injuries at each prison service establishment in 1991 is listed in the table. Information for earlier years is not available.

Deportation Orders

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken on applicants for asylum who have received paragraph 101 refusals on the basis of non-appearance at interviews; and how many of those refused since 1 December 1991 have been served with removal or deportation orders.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Unless an asylum applicant refused under paragraph 101 of the immigration rules is subsequently in touch with the Department, he remains liable to arrest and administrative action to enforce his departure. Information about the numbers subject to such action is not collected in the form requested.

Rape

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in rank order for each police force in England and Wales, the number of females who have reported being raped during the last 12 months.

Mr. Jack: The available information held centrally relates to the number of notifiable offences of rape recorded by the police and is given in the table. Although there are no figures for the number of offences reported, recent Home Office research shows that 61 per cent. of allegations of rape were recorded by the police in 1989.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and any agency which reports to his Department in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's memorandum on this subject which was submitted to the Environment Committee of this House in the previous Session. It has now been published by HMSO as part of the Environment Committee's report on coastal zone protection and planning, volume II, minutes of evidence and appendices.

Intelligence Data

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement, in the form that does not jeopardise national security, on the criteria used by the Security Service to help it decide whether personal data should be retained by it; and how such criteria have varied since 1989.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have nothing to add to the Security Service Commissioner's report on Security Service record-keeping policy in his annual report for 1991 and his conclusion that the general policy on retention of records was acceptable.

Subversion

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide, in a form that does not jeopardise national security, generalised examples of subversive activities that do not involve law breaking; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No.

Ethnic Minorities

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what means and through what channels section 11 resources will be allocated to colleges of further education following their removal from local authority control.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: After further education and sixth form colleges leave local authority control on 1 April 1993, they will be eligible to receive, and to apply for, section 11 grant direct. Posts already approved for funding from 1 April 1992 will continue to be eligible for grant, with the contribution previously made by the local authority being met by the Further Education Funding Council. Detailed administrative arrangements are under consideration.

HEALTH

Eye Tests

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the circumstances under which pensioners may be asked to pay for eye tests.

Dr. Mawhinney: Pensioners as a group have never been automatically exempted from payment of optical costs, including those for sight tests. Pensioners who receive income support are entitled to free NHS sight tests. Pensioners on a low income can claim help with their optical costs under the NHS low-income scheme.

Community Health Services

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how spending on health and community health services (a) for elderly people and (b) for mentally ill people has changed since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: Available data are given in the table. Estimated spending on services for elderly people does not include spending on the acute hospital services which are used by people in all age groups including elderly people.

Estimated Hospital and Community Health Service (HCHS) spending on services for elderly people and for mentally ill people 1979-80 and 1990-91.

	Spending (£ million cash)		Real terms increase[1]
	1979-80	1990-91	(per cent.)
Services for elderly people	651	1,927·6	36·5
Services for mentally ill people	592·8	1,763·5	37·1
Total HCHS expenditure (excluding joint finance)	5,309·5	14,745·8	28·0

Breast Cancer

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the clinical trials at London's Royal Marsden hospital that are planned to discover if patients suffering from breast cancer would benefit from hormone replacement therapy; and when she expects the results will be published.

Mr. Sackville: There are no firm plans to hold such a trial at the Royal Marsden hospital.

Organophosphates

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out into the effects of organophosphates on the human body and methods of entry into the human body; who carried out that research; and who is carrying out research currently.

Mr. Sackville: Organophosphate toxicology is a very heavily researched area and many papers reporting such research are published each month in the world's scientific journals. Organophosphate research was recently reviewed by Ballantyne and Marrs—"Clinical and experimental toxicology of organophosphates and carbamates", published by Butterworth—Heinemann, Oxford, 1992.

A number of groups are carrying out research into the action of organophosphates including, in the United Kingdom:

(a) Medical Research Council Laboratories, Carshalton (Dr. Martin Johnson).
(b) University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne (Professor Peter Blaine).
(c) Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, Salisbury.

In addition, clinical research has been carried out at the poisons units, particularly by Dr. Virginia Murray in London and Dr. Allister Vale in Birmingham, and the Health and Safety Executive is proposing to carry out a study of farm staff and contract workers using organophosphate sheep dips.

Outside the United Kingdom, there are numerous groups working on organophosphates, notably:

Belgium – University of Ghent (Dr. Willems).
Canada – DRES, Suffield, Alberta (Dr. Clements).
Hungary – Szent-Gyorgy University, Szeged (Professor Desi).
Italy – University of Padua (Professor Lotti).
Portugal – Coimbra University Hospital (Dr. Pimentel).
USA – Vanderbilt University, Nashville (Professor Dettbarn).

Trust Hospitals

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all trust hospitals together with their postal addresses and the names of their chief executives.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Nursing Beds

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing beds within the private sector there are within the Seaham, Murton, Easington, Peterlee, Shotton, Horden, Blackhall and South Hetton area.

Mr. Yeo: Information is not available in the form requested.

Dentistry

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the membership and remuneration of the members of the Dental Estimates Board.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Dental Practice Board—DPB—previously known as the Dental Estimates Board, comprises five dental members, two lay members and the chief executive, who is also a lay member. Current membership is as follows:

Chairman (dentist)
Mr. T. H. Farrell
Vice Chairman (dentist)
Mr. W. H. Evans
Dental Members
Mr. D. W. Lester
Mr. R. A. Gorham
Mr. H. G. Lewis
Lay Members
Mr. D. A. Dryer
Mrs. C. A. Osborne
Chief Executive
Mr. J. A. Taylor

The chairman receives remuneration of £23,658·18 per annum for an average attendance of 2·5 days per week, plus £182 for each additional day of attendance. He is also entitled to travel and subsistence payments for attendance at meetings held away from the DPB site at Eastbourne.

Other members, with the exception of the chief executive, receive a fee of £124·68 for each day of attendance at the DPB. They are also entitled to travel and subsistence payments.

The chief executive is a full-time employee of the DPB. He is not remunerated separately as a board member.

Community Care

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last met the Association of Directors of Social Services to discuss community care.

Mr. Yeo: My hon. Friend the Minister for Health last met the Association of Directors of Social Services on 4 June.

Child Care

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to improve child care provision, following the EC child care recommendations.

Mr. Yeo: The EC child care recommendation, adopted on 31 March 1992, will contribute to the continuing debate on child care. The Department's latest statistics, "Children's day care facilities at 31 March 1991, England"; a copy of which is available in the Library, show that in England between 1988 and 1991 registered day nursery places grew by 112 per cent. from 36,000 to 77,000 and the number of registered child-minders by 42 per cent. from 73,600 to 104,900. The Children Act 1989 gives a new duty to local authorities to review the child-care services used by children aged under eight in their area every three years and publish a report. This requirement gives local authorities a strategic role in child care and provides a legal framework for production of a local child care plan which will result in sensible expansion and development.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients had been waiting for hospital treatment (a) under one year, (b) one to two years and (c) over two years at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby), on 10 June at columns 219-20.

Community Psychiatric Nursing

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the current review of community psychiatric nursing will be completed; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 9 June 1992]: The review of mental health nursing was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in her speech to the Royal College of Nursing congress on 27 April 1992.

The precise terms of reference, the chairmanship and membership of the steering group for the review, together with its method of working, are being finalised.

The review will be concerned with all aspects of mental health nursing including community psychiatric nursing and will examine practice, leadership and education.

The review will be taken forward by a multi-disciplinary steering group. The chairmanship and membership of the group will be announced by mid-July. The first meeting of the group will take place in September and the work will be completed within a year.

The work of this review will feed into that of the mental health task force which was announced at the end of February.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Personal Data

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Officials are aware of the need to consult the registrar about proposed legislation or other initiatives which might affect or be affected by the Data Protection Act 1984, and will consult him as necessary when planning the collection, use or disclosure of automated personal data.

Developing Nations (Trade)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policies Her Majesty's Government pursue to promote trade between developing nations and the EC.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

The Government support the Community's efforts, as in the current GATT Uruguay round negotiations, to create open trading conditions which will increase trade with all countries, including the developing nations. In addition, the European Community gives preferential access to most products from developing countries under its generalised system of preferences scheme. This provides especially generous treatment for the least developed. The trade provisions of the Lomé convention also provide access to Community markets at zero duty for most products from the African, Caribbean and Pacific states.

Clothing and Textiles

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the position of the United Kingdom Government regarding the import of Bangladeshi textiles and clothing into the EC after the creation of the single market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

Regulation of textiles and clothing imports from Bangladesh into the European Community is governed by the multi-fibre arrangement bilateral agreement on trade in textiles between the two parties, the provisions of which are unlikely to be significantly affected by completion of the single market.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the current quotas for textile and clothing imports into the United Kingdom from countries covered by the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to EC regulation 369/92 published in the "Official Journal of the European Communities", No. L45 of 20 February 1992, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the cost of producing and distributing "student grants and loans"; and how many copies are being produced.

Mr. Forman: We plan to produce and distribute at least 900,000 copies of "Student Grants and Loans: A brief guide 1992-93" at an estimated cost of about £88,000. We shall produce additional copies if there is sufficient demand.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Greenwich Generating Station

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 May, Official Report, column 104, how many of the representations he has received about the MetroPower proposals to redevelop Greenwich generating station have supported the proposal and how many have objected to it.

Mr. Eggar Under the Electricity (Applications for Consent) Regulations 1990 an opportunity must be given for objections to the MetroPower proposals to be registered with my Department. More than 100 objections were so registered by the date specified under the regulations. The regulations do not provide for support for proposals to be registered.

Waste Strategy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to prepare a United Kingdom-wide strategy for the commercial energy industry covering extraction, conversion, transport and waste over the next 30 years.

Mr. Eggar: No. The Government have set out their policy designed to ensure that consumers obtain energy efficiently. Strategy blueprints on the lines proposed by the hon. Member do not work and have been rejected even by the former socialist economies.

Natural Gas

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action is being undertaken by his Department to reduce the flaming of natural gas in the oil extraction process.

Mr. Eggar: My consent is required to the flaring of any gas produced in association with oil in the United Kingdom. In granting such consents, my policy is to ensure that flaring is restricted to the minimum amounts which are consistent with maintaining safe and economic operations.

Energy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been allocated during each of the last five years by his Department to fund research and development on (a) energy produced from fossil fuel sources and (b) the development of energy from renewable sources.

Mr. Eggar: Following is the information requested:

	£ million
1987-88	9·8
1988-89	7·9
1989-90	5·6
1990-91	15·9

[1] 1987-88 and 1988-89 figures are taken from the annual review of Government-funded research and development. These figuress relate essentially to Frascati research and development.

[2] 1989-90 and 1990-91 figures are final outturn.

[3] 1991-92 figures are taken from main estimates.

Coal Imports

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the tonnages of coal imports into the ports of Sunderland, Seaham, Hartlepool and Teesside during the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and what were the points of origin.

Mr. Eggar: Coal imports for these areas are shown in the table. Imports at Seaham are recorded under the port of Sunderland. Imports at Teesside are shown for the port of Middlesbrough.

Waste

Mr. Evennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce the public inquiry into the Cory waste-to-energy incinerator proposal in Belvedere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Arrangements for the public inquiry are nearing completion and I expect to announce the details shortly. I will write to my hon. Friend once they are finalised.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the United Kingdom has set a target for the percentage of total electricity supply from renewable resources.

Mr. Eggar: The Government are working towards the establishment of 1,000 MW of new renewables-based electricity generation capacity in the United Kingdom by the year 2000. Targets for the exploitation of renewable energy resources are under consideration, as part of the current review of the Government's renewable energy programme.

Earth Summit

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the impact for fuel choice and generating plant capacity, investment, mothballing and permanent retirement of treaty undertakings on global warming on offer at the Rio de Janeiro Earth summit conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 9 June 1992]: The Government's commitments to the control of carbon dioxide emissions under the framework convention on climate change will take into account a wide range of issues, which in the electricity sector include the expected installation of high-efficiency gas-fired plant, the fostering of renewables under the non-fossil fuel obligation, and the retirement of some existing generating plant.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the result to date of the writs issued by his Department to the Midland bank and other financial intermediaries in respect of the Barlow Clowes affair.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

A number of proceedings have been commenced following the statement by the Secretary of State to the House on 19 December 1989. I cannot comment on individual cases.

WALES

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the last date on which he considers it would be reasonable to indicate that his plans for local government reorganisation will go forward in a time scale that woud make it convenient to cancel the county council elections currently planned for May 1993.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on Friday 5 June 1992, at column 662.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether it is his intention to introduce legislation to give effect to his plans for local governmnent reorganisation in Wales during the current session of Parliament.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on Wednesday 10 June, at column 182.

A483 (Bridge Repairs)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the reasons for the bridge repairs at Rosset, near Wrexham on the A483; and who is to pay for them.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The bridge is not being repaired. Concrete sections of the bridge are being treated with a chemical to protect the surfaces from the harmful effects of winter salting. The Welsh Office will pay for the work.

Singleton Hospital

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce his decision about the night casualty service at Singleton hospital, Swansea.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 11 June.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 11 June.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is in Rio de Janeiro to attend the Earth summit and will have bilateral meetings later today with various Heads of Government.

Women

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to increase the number of women in the Cabinet.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister considers all the excellent candidates available on merit at the appropriate times.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the actions he intends to take to promote the interests of women.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has recently set up a new ministerial sub-committee on women's issues to review and develop the Government's policy and strategy on issues of special concern to women. The committee will be chaired by the Secretary of State for Employment, who now has overall responsibility for co-ordinating women's issues within Government. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has also appointed Baroness Denton, Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms, as Government co-chair of the Women's National Commission which will continue to represent the concerns of women to the Government.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about the measures being taken to increase the number of women in the upper levels of the civil service.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

Appointements and promotions at all levels in the civil service are made on the basis of merit, qualifications and suitability for the job. Under a new programme for action to achieve quality of opportunity for women in the civil service, launched in March this year, Departments and agencies are developing and implementing action plans tailored to their own needs. The plans aim at improving the quality and quantity of women's opportunities at senior and all other levels.

Family Conciliation

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has for funding family conciliation services; which departmental budget funds such services at present; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

Local family conciliation services in England and Wales are currently funded by the voluntary and private sectors with assistance in some areas from the probation service and local authorities. No Department currently funds such services directly and the Government have no current plans to introduce such funding.

The Lord Chancellor's Department is considering the role of conciliation services in England and Wales as part of the wider review of family law announced earlier this year.

Conservation Unit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to develop an interdepartmental conservation and development co-ordinating unit with a mandate to examine departmental policy and investment proposals prior to their presentation to Cabinet.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

This is not necessary. Cabinet procedure already requires that all papers which are prepared for Cabinet and ministerial committees should, where appropriate, cover any significant costs or benefits to the environment. There is a ministerial committee on the environment, whose terms of reference are "to consider questions of environmental policy".

Each Government Department has a Minister responsible for environmental matters in his or her Department. There is also other co-ordinating machinery.

CIS (Research)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his response to the recommendations of the report he commissioned last year from the Royal Society on ways to assist scientists in the Commonwealth of Independent States to maintain their research base.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 20 May at column 137.

Environmental Audit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure that all Government Departments are subject to periodic environmental audits.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

Government Departments publish accounts of their environmental performance in their annual departmental reports. This follows a commitment set out in the 1990 environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance", Cm 1200, and reaffirmed in the 1991 first-year report on that White Paper, Cm. 1655.

Earth Summit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what resource commitments have been made by Her Majesty's Government to support the institutional requirements to implement United Nations Conference on Environmental and Development decisions.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

We expect agreement to be reached during the Earth summit on the most effective and efficient institutions to follow up recommendations made at the UN Conference on Environment and Development. We believe that a sustainable development commission is the right mechanism. We will consider what financial resources are appropriate once the institutional framework has been agreed.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) of 2 June, Official Report, column 392, if he will list the heads of Government he has met since 9 April, and the date on which he discussed with them the Earth summit.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has nothing further to add to the answer he gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North on 2 June at column 392.

Secret Services

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all the present and past locations in Britain of the secret intelligence service and of the Security Service.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

It would not be in the interests of national security to provide this information.

Honours System

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what is the latest estimated annual cost to public funds of operating the honours system.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

Figures for the cost of operating the honours system could not be provided other than at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rape

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of females who have reported being raped during the last 12 months in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: I am informed by the Chief Constable that the most recent figures available show that during the 12-month period 1 May 1991 to 30 April 1992 the Royal Ulster Constabulary received 108 reports of rape from females.

Chemical Waste

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the chemicals and the amounts of such chemicals removed from the old Mackies factory in Belfast after the factory was vacated; by whom the materials were removed; by what means final disposal was effected and by whom; what steps he has taken to assure himself that the disposal was safe and effective; what role his Department had in the clearing of such chemicals from the site; and why the chemicals were not removed and disposed of before the premises were vacated.

Mr. Atkins: Lummus Mackie Ltd. has not yet fully vacated its old factory in Belfast. The move to new premises should be completed by the end of August this year, by which time it is understood that all potentially harmful chemicals will have been removed.

Fire Regulations

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects all premises registered under the Northern Ireland tourism legislation to comply with the necessary fire regulations; and when he expects the Northern Ireland Fire Service to complete inspection of all such existing premises for compliance with such regulations as are required under the 1984 order.

Mr. Atkins: Applications for the grant of a fire certificate have been made on behalf of 372 premises in the categories covered by Northern Ireland tourism legislation. Of these, 69 remain to be inspected and this process is expected to be completed by December 1993. Sixty-four premises have so far been refused certificates.

Traffic

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the traffic volume on (a) the Belfast road into Larne and (b) the Dublin road south of Newry to the border.

Mr. Atkins: The average daily traffic flow is 13,850 vehicles and 6,000 vehicles respectively.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: The Northern Ireland Office and each of the Northern Ireland Departments have appointed a data protection officer responsible for the maintenance of the Department's data protection register. Recently, with the assistance of the office of the Data Protection Registrar, all Departments reviewed their effectiveness in fulfilling the requirements of the Act and subsequently initiated a number of minor refinements to existing practice. There is an inter-departmental data protection officers' forum in Northern Ireland which ensures regular review of requirements as well as the effective read-across of departmental experiences.

Road Schemes

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the total sums projected in the appropriate orders for (a) major capital road works, (b) road maintenance and (c) minor capital road works in each of the financial years (i) 1988-89, (ii) 1989-90, (iii) 1990-91 and (iv) 1991-92 and the sums actually expended under each of those headings in those years; and if he will indicate any increases and decreases from the sums initially projected in each year and also any differences from the longer term estimates for those years.

Civil Servants

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the number of civil servants in the Northern Ireland Office, (a) in Belfast and (b) in London, indicating in each case how many are of Northern Ireland origin and how many of Great Britain origin.

Mr. Mates: As at 1 April 1992 there were 106 staff working in London and 1,435 in Northern Ireland. The information on origin is not held by the Northern Ireland Office.

Airports Authority

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he requested the board of the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company Ltd. to reconsider its new nominee for the chairmanship of the Northern Ireland Airports Authority Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I wrote to the chairman of the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company on 1 June, asking to be reassured that the board had been able to cast its net sufficiently widely before a decision was taken on approval of any appointment as chairman. I also asked if the board would be prepared to make at least three names available for consideration.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Unemployment

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons under the age of 21 are unemployed in the Morpeth-Northumberland travel-to-work area at the most recent date.

Mr. McLoughlin: Unemployment figures by age and duration are available on a quarterly basis, but only for standard age bands. In April 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 695 claimant unemployed persons aged under 20 in the Morpeth and Ashington travel-to-work area.

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the impact of Government policies on long-term unemployment.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the impact of Government policies on long-term unemployment.

Mr. McLoughlin: We are firmly committed to helping long-term unemployed people get back to work. We have in place a wider than ever range of measures to help unemployed people, including the long-term unemployed, find jobs as quickly as possible. These measures are part of a coherent package of policies which are setting a sound economic framework for sustainable non-inflationary growth.

Local Office, Newport

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will instruct the manager of the Newport, Gwent, unemployment benefit office to report how many unemployed people were disqualified for unemployment benefit and for what periods, under each paragraph of section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975, in the area covered by that office in the week commencing 15 June; and if she will place this information in the Library.

Mr. McLoughlin: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

ENVIRONMENT

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to improve the monitoring of sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Maclean: In England the responsibility for monitoring individual sites of special scientific interest lies with English Nature which is giving particular attention to improving its performance in this area. For example in 1991-92 some 51 per cent. of SSSIs in England received site integrity monitoring involving a basic check on whether major loss or damage has occurred. English Nature is also developing its existing system of site quality monitoring which surveys a sample of SSSIs for its detailed scientific value each year.

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to develop and implement a United Kingdom plan to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from agricultural processes.

Mr. Maclean: The Government intend to consider the scope for limiting greenhouse gas emissions from all sources, including the agricultural sector, in drawing up their national programme under the framework convention on climate change.

Methane

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts are currently being undertaken by his Department to improve the maintenance of oil and natural gas production systems as a means of reducing methane leakage.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is participating in a study led by the Department of Trade and Industry aimed at improving knowledge of methane emissions from all sources, including oil and natural gas production.

Social Housing

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department will take to counteract the recent Audit Commission's optimistic forecast of a shortfall of 12,000 social lettings each year; and if he will comment on the report.

Mr. Baldry: The Audit Commission's report "Developing Local Authority Housing Strategies", including the discussion of supply and demand for social housing, is a useful contribution to public debate on housing policy. Besides the recommendations addressed to central Government, which we shall consider carefully, the report contains many recommendations for local authorities on how they could make more effective use of their existing stock of housing and other resources.

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Audit Commissioner's report on the shortfall of 12,000 homes per year; and what effect this has on waiting lists.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr.

Evans). Local authorities' practices in maintaining waiting lists for council housing vary widely, and they are therefore not an accurate indicator of unmet need for social housing.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the cost to Easington district council of collecting the community charge 1991-92 and the estimated costs involved to Easington council in collecting the council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: The cost in 1991-92 to Easington district council of collecting the community charge was £696,000. No estimate is available of the cost of collecting the council tax.

Water Extraction

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the National Rivers Authority in respect of limiting new, and renewing, licences for water extraction by non-domestic users; and what was the result of those discussions.

Mr. Maclean: It is for the NRA to consider applications on their merits in the light of the authority's general duty to take steps to conserve, redistribute or otherwise augment water resources in England and Wales, and to secure their proper use.

City Challenge

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to make announcements on the second wave of city challenge bids.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 20 May, Official Report, column 148.

Council Tax (Valulation List)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce regulations that would prevent a person from making copies of the council tax valuation list for a purpose not associated with an appeal with respect to a valuation.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have made it quite clear that valuation lists will not be made available to commercial organisations. Valuation lists are, however, public documents and it would be wrong to restrict interested parties' rights to obtain information from them.

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans there are for local authorities to have access to the Government radiation incident monitoring network.

Mr. Maclean: Under current arrangements lead local authorities have electronic mail access to RIMNET information bulletins and data summaries. Under the next phase of the RIMNET project, due for completion later this year, it will be possible for more local authorities, with the necessary expertise, to enter radiological measurements and receive information and data summaries over public data network and electronic mail links.

Local Authority Land Sales

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the total assets by local authority which local authorities have raised from the sale of open land and playing fields in the last two years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not available. However, returns to the Department from local authorities give information on sales of fixed assets in the service categories "parks and open spaces" and "other outside sports and playing fields". I have arranged for the data for the latest available years to be placed in the Library of the House.

Council House Sales

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has available to him concerning the current level of service charges payable to local authorities in respect of flats purchased by sitting tenants under the right-to-buy legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not collect this information from local authorities. The protections against unreasonable service charges in the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 apply to all leaseholders, including those who bought under the right to buy. In addition, purchasers of flats under the right to buy are given pre-sale estimates of service charges covering the first five years of the lease, and cannot be charged more than the amounts estimated for repairs and improvements.

Water Charges

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the Office of Water Supply in affecting water companies' charges.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Devon, North (Mr. Harvey) on 19 May 1992, Official Report, column 73.

Orimulsion

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects Her Majesty' inspectorate of pollution to make a decision with regard to the burning of orimulsion at Padiham power station.

Mr. Maclean: National Power has agreed to a request from HMIP for an extension of the determination period for this application to 30 September. Unless further extensions are required, the authorisation will be issued by this date.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secetary of State for the Environment if he will list the companies who have applied to use orimulsion fuel on a commercial basis; and if he will show in his answer those which have been (a) granted and (b) refused permission.

Mr. Maclean: National Power has applied under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to HMIP to burn orimulsion in its power stations at Pembroke in Wales and Padiham in Lancashire. Both applications are currently being considered.

PowerGen has permission under previous legislation to burn limited amounts of orimulsion in its power stations at Ince in Cheshire and at Richborough in Kent. The company has applied to burn orimulsion in these stations under the 1990 Act. These applications are the subject of an appeal to my right hon. and learned Friend about commercial confidentiality. They cannot be determined until after the appeal decision, which will be made as soon as possible.

Maiden Down Common

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in respect of the mass protest walk held on Maiden Down common, east Cornwall in April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have not received any representations in respect of a mass protest walk on Maiden Down common, east Devon, in April.

Homelessness

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless people in the Easington district council area are aged (a) 17 and 18 years, (b) 18 and 19 years, (c) 19 years, (d) 20 years and (e) 20 and 21 years; and what extra resources are being made available to Easington district council to tackle the problem.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure permanent accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 in their quarterly P1(E) return. The quarterly P1(E) returns identify such households by the category of need but not by age. The total number of all households accepted by Easington under these provisions in the fourth quarter of 1991 was 27.

In the second quarter of this year the return was revised to identify for the first time:

(i) households in priority need who were accepted as homeless because the household contained vulnerable young person(s) (aged 16 and over) and,

(b) young single homeless people who were not in priority need for whom the authority nevertheless agreed to secure permanent accommodation.

Since then, Easington has reported accepting only one such household, in the first of these two categories during the second quarter of 1991.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the number of families accepted as homeless for each housing authority area in England in (a) 1978-79 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Baldry: Information on homeless households for whom local authorities have accepted responsibility to secure accommodation under the provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and part III of the Housing act 1985 is reported quarterly to the Department —half-yearly before 1984.

The available information can be found in the following publications:

"Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales", Edition No. 52 (Table 12), acceptance figures for both halves of 1978.

"Households found accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the first quarter 1991. Supplementary Tables" (Table 7), number of acceptances in the first quarter 1991.

"Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act. Supplementary Table", acceptances in the second, third and fourth quarters of 1991.

From the second quarter of 1991 the definition of acceptances was altered to exclude intentionally homeless and the guidance to local authorities on completion of their returns was expanded. The acceptance figures for quarters 2, 3 and 4 of 1991 are not therefore strictly comparable with those for quarter 1, 1991 and earlier years.

Copies are in the Library.

Hedgerows

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many miles of hedgerow have been planted in the northern region for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91; and at what cost in grants.

Mr. Maclean: Information is not available in this form. however, grants for the planting of hedgerows are available from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Countryside Commission as part of their wider grant schemes.

Environmental Impact Assessments

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that environmental impact assessments take social and economic costs and benefits of projects into account.

Mr. Maclean: Where a project which is the subject of a planning application requires environmental assessment, the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 provide that the environmental statement submitted by the applicant shall include a description of the likely significant effects on the environment. These include the impact on human beings as well as on flora, fauna, water, air and the landscape, and beneficial effects as well as adverse effects.

In deciding whether to grant consent the decision-taking authority must have regard to the environmental information—that is, the applicant's environmental statement and any comments on it from the statutory consultees and the general public—and also to any other material considerations.

Similar provisions apply where environmental assessment is required for projects which are subject to other approval procedures, for example, under the Highways and Electricity Acts.

United Nations

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to support the production of an annual statement on the environment by the United Nations.

Mr. Maclean: The United Nations Environment Programme already issues an annual report on the state of the world environment. The Government fully support the production of this informative document.

International Meetings

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage the full participation of non-governmental organisations in international environmental meetings.

Mr. Maclean: It is already our policy to encourage participation of non-governmental organisations in international environmental meetings. For instance the United Kingdom's delegation to the Earth summit includes representatives of environment and development groups, industry, youth, trades unions, local government and scientists.

Global Environment Facility

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of financial contribution granted by his Department to the global environment facility.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Earth Summit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the specific roles of each Minister in his Department in the preparatory meetings leading up to the forthcoming United Nations Conference on Environment and Development conference.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and previous Secretaries of State as well as other Ministers in this Department have been involved in the negotiations made at each stage of the process leading up to the UN Conference on Environment and Development. My right hon. Friend, the then Secretary of State for the Environment, attended a preparatory meeting in New York in March. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I attended UNCED in Rio.

Sheep Dip

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been carried out into the entry of organophosphates into the water table, as a result of their use in sheep dips.

Mr. Maclean: The National Rivers Authority, in conjunction with regulatory bodies in Scotland and Northern Ireland, has recently completed a research programme on the extent of pollution caused by disposal of spent sheep dip to soakaway. A report is expected shortly which will outline the findings and recommend appropriate disposal practices.

Nitrous Oxide Emissions

Mrs. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the increase in nitrous dioxide emissions in the past five years in London; and whether there will be official Government warnings issued or advice proffered to Londoners to minimise health risks.

Mr. Maclean: Total United Kingdom emissions of oxides of nitrogen from motor vehicles—the principal source—are estimated to have risen by 38 per cent. between 1986 and 1991. The increase is likely to have been similar in the London area. Advice on the health implications of episodes of high nitrogen dioxide concentrations is available on a free telephone line—0800 556677—and from general practitioners. Daily air quality bulletins and forecasts are available on the same telephone line, on Ceefax and in some newspapers.

Mineral Planning Guidance

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet decided whether there is a need to revise mineral planning guidance 3 following the recent consultation.

Mr Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 2 June, Official Report, column 377.

Mortgages

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his meeting with representatives of mortgage lenders on 2 June and the information they provided him with about the underlying position with respect to arrears and possessions.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 4 June, at column 611.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department has issued to owners of domestic appliances which contain chlorofluorocarbons who wish to ensure that chlorofluorocarbons are not released into the atmosphere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: On 21 May, I launched a leaflet on CFCs, entitled "You and the Ozone Layer", which advises consumers about products which may contain CFCs or other ozone-depleting substances. The leaflet also gives information about the safe disposal of domestic appliances, such as fridges and freezers, urges owners to ensure that the CFC coolant will be safely removed for recycling and advises owners who are having their fridges or freezers serviced to check that the service engineer is trained to handle the coolant, and is prepared to send any coolant that is removed for recycling.

Halons

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the use of halons 1211 and 1301 in fire-fighting equipment will be banned; and if he will make a statement on their use.

Mr. Maclean: The UK's policy is to control the production and supply of halons rather than their use. We are pressing for a phase-out of halons by the end of 1995 internationally, and the end of 1994 in the EC. Users who will still need halons after the phase-out of production and supply should consider now how they will meet these needs. The Government are working closely with users and the fire industry to see what might be done to facilitate halon recycling and banking.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further information he has made available to local authorities about standard spending assessments.

Mr. Robin Squire: A publication "Standard Spending Assessment Handbook 1992/93" has been produced to provide details of the standard spending assessment of each local authority. Copies of the publication have today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Copies are also being sent to every local authority in England and to the local authority associations.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average length of time for appeals to be heard against uniform business rates in (a) south Cumbria and (b) the rest of England and Wales.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information is not available centrally on the time taken to deal with non-domestic rating appeals.

Following revaluation on 1 April 1990, tribunals in England initially received some 600,000 appeals, including transitional cases. Most of these were received by tribunals towards the end of that financial year. By the end of March 1992 about 220,000 appeals had been resolved.

Cumbria valuation tribunal initially received about 7,800 appeals and by the end of March 1992 some 4,200 had been resolved.

"Pollution and Waste Management"

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the planning policy guidance, "Pollution and Waste Management".

Sir George Young: On Tuesday this week, my right hon. and learned Friend published for public consultation a new draft planning policy guidance note on planning and pollution control, which fulfils a commitment in the environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance". We also published the results of a research study, commissioned to inform in the preparation of the draft PPG. My right hon. and learned Friend expects to issue the final version of the PPG, in the light of responses to the consultation draft, later this year.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts have been made by his Department to encourage other countries to implement the revised Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer since June 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The Government took a leading role in the negotiations to revise the Montreal protocol in 1990, including the provisions for funding and technology transfer for developing countries which are designed to encourage maximum participation. We are fully committed to providing our contribution to the funding mechanism, and have also made considerable diplomatic efforts to encourage other countries to ratify the protocol. We also played an active role in negotiating the EC regulation which ensures the implementation of the revised protocol throughout the Community.

Renewable Energy Systems

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action will be taken by his Department to accelerate the development and adoption of solar and other low-impact renewable energy systems and more efficient energy storage devices.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has a wide-ranging programme to support the development, promotion and commercialisation of renewable energy in the United Kingdom, including solar energy. This includes a technical programme covering R and D, demonstration and technology transfer (costing £24·3 million in 1992-93) and action, under the Electricity Act 1989, setting non-fossil fuel obligation orders to provide a premium market for electricity-generating renewables in England and Wales.

There is a continuing dialogue with industry on the development of advanced battery technology. A project on superconducting magnetic energy storage, with an estimated total cost of around £1 million, is currently being considered for support by the Department.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Footpaths

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what account he intends his Department to take of the needs of disabled people who are currently denied access to footpaths on account of their construction.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

Access to public footpaths is primarily the responsibility of local highway authorities. However, as part of its "Enjoying the Countryside: Policies for People" initiative, the Countryside Commission is commissioning an advisory service for its own regional office staff on how to open up the countryside to the disabled; it is also revising its advisory booklet "Informal Countryside Recreation for Disabled People".

SOCIAL SECURITY

Resettlement

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria his Department uses to approve closure of resettlement units; and which of the remaining 15 are currently being considered for replacement.

Miss Widdecombe: The management of the Resettlement Agency, and the development of replacement proposals for resettlement units is a matter for Mr. Tony Ward, the chief executive, although no unit is closed unless Ministers are satisfied with replacement proposals. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Tony Graham

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will set out for the case of Mr. Tony Graham, Christopher court, Hemel Hampstead, reference BS/M2/39342, the date on which his war pension increase was awarded by the tribunal and the date on which payment of the arrears and continuing increase were made.

Miss Widdecombe: The payment of war pensions is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which benefits for people with disabilities are denied to anyone over 65 years of age.

Mr. Scott: Disability living allowance (DLA) may be claimed up to a person's 66th birthday, providing that the disability occurred before his or her 65th birthday. There is no upper age limit for receipt: once awarded, the benefit may remain payable indefinitely. Attendance allowance is available to people becoming disabled after age 65, or claiming after age 66.

The provisions of the following benefits change at ages 60 or 65 for women and ages 65 or 70 for men, to take account of the ending of an individual's liability to pay national insurance contributions and the availability of retirement pension.

On sickness and invalidity benefits, from age 60 for women and age 65 for men the standard rates of benefit are replaced by the rate at which retirement pension would be payable—abated by 5 per cent. in the case of sickness benefit. The upper age limit for receipt of benefit is 64 for women and 69 for men.

On severe disablement allowance, the upper age limit for claims is 59 for women and 64 for men, although currently women aged 60-64 are also able to claim as a result of a decision by the Court of Appeal. Once awarded, benefit is payable for life if the qualifying conditions continue to be satisfied up to age 65 for women or age 70 for men.

On industrial injuries benefits, from age 60 for women and age 65 for men, people who are receiving reduced earnings allowance and who give up regular employment are paid retirement allowance. Retirement allowance is payable for life.

On war pensions, the upper age limit for qualifying for unemployability supplement and allowance for lowered standard of occupation is 59 for women and 64 for men. Once entitlement has been established, however, both can continue for life.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) community charge benefit, were in receipt of severe disability premium as of 31 March.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not avaiable.

Distribution of Wealth

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of Government policies on the economic well-being of the poorest decile of the income distribution.

Mr. Burt: We continue to monitor the effectiveness of the social security system, as we have done since introducing the major reforms of 1988.

National Insurance Cards

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many plastic national insurance number cards have been issued; and how much each national insurance number card costs.

Miss Widdecombe: The issue of plastic national insurance number cards is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Maxwell Pensioners

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) who will administer his temporary Maxwell pensioner rescue package;

(2) what information he has on the numbers of pensioners who could be assisted, and the amount to which they could be assisted, by his temporary Maxwell pensioner rescue package;

(3) what guidelines he will be giving to the administrators of his temporary Maxwell pensioner rescue package as to (a) the circumstances in which payments should be made and (b) the levels to be paid;

(4) if he will publish a telephone number where advice on claiming grants under his Maxwell pensioners emergency package can be obtained;

(5) when the first payments under his Maxwell pensioners emergency package will be made.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 8 June the setting up of a special unit within the Department of Social Security and the establishment of a trust. Individual pensioners need take no action as funds will be made available directly to the independent trustees. Those funds are intended to assist Maxwell schemes that find themselves in difficulties. Funds will be used to protect the pensions of Headington pension scheme members, including the payment for May, to assist schemes that are unable to continue full payment of pensions and to allow schemes to commence payment of pensions to recently retired pensioners. Discussions have already been held with the independent trustees of the Headington pension scheme and we expect the first payments to be made soon.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions about the duration of disqualification for unemployment benefit were made in estimating the cost of reducing the maximum to six weeks, for the purpose of replying to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 21 January, Official Report, column 180; and on what evidence these assumptions were based.

Mr. Burt: The estimate was based upon the actual number of disqualifications in force on 9 May 1991 and an assumption that around two thirds of those disqualified would still be unemployed and disqualified after six weeks. The average length on the unemployment register by claimants disqualified for receiving unemployment benefit has been assumed to be 11 weeks, based upon current unemployment benefit statistics. This is less than the 21-week average period of disqualification—one of the findings of a departmental survey published in 1989 entitled "An Analysis of Voluntary Unemployed Claimants", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Leaflet FB31

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish the letter sent to Mr. Martin Baillie of the Islington welfare rights unit in reply to his letter of 9 January to the chief executive of the Benefits Agency concerning leaflet FB31.

Mr. Burt: The handling of correspondence from the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member regarding the publication of the letter and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Social Fund

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure on discretionary grants and loans, respectively, from the social fund for each month in 1991-92: and what are the monthly equivalents of the amounts allocated for such expenditure in 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: Separate monthly allocations are not made within the financial year. Information concerning discretionary social fund expenditure for each month in 1991-92 is in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lobster Fisheries

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to amend the Sea Fisheries (Shellfish) Act 1967, particularly concerning the creation of enhanced lobster fisheries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Officials from the Department have held discussions with fishing industry representatives in England and Wales about the possibility of extending the power to grant several and regulating orders so as to cover crustacean species in addition to the molluscan species already covered. In the light of the views expressed, I intend to introduce legislation to this affect when the opportunity arises.

Broiler Chickens

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his response to the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on the welfare of broiler chickens.

Mr. Soames: The Government welcome this report. We will be consulting interested organisations on it shortly and will issue a response when all the comments have been carefully considered.

Farm Waste Management

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his proposed pilot study on farm waste management plans.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have decided that a pilot study should be undertaken to see if pollution could be cut by farmers drawing up tailor-made plans for disposing of manure, slurry and other organic wastes on their holdings. These plans will advise when, where and in what quantities farmers should spread wastes in order to avoid water pollution and get the most benefit from the nutrients in them. The areas we have chosen for the study comprise parts of the following river catchments: the River Weaver in Cheshire; the River Frome in Somerset; the River Clyst in Devon; and the Afon Ceri in Wales.

The catchments were chosen, following consultation with the National Rivers Authority, to represent typical dairy farming areas.

The National Farmers Union, the Country Landowners Association and the Farmers Union of Wales have indicated their full support for this pilot study and their wish that as many farmers as possible will agree to participate in it.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service project officers nominated for each catchment will be contacting some 100 or so farmers in each of the areas concerned to ask them to take part in the pilot study. They will be available to help farmers involved in the study.

We very much hope that this study will be a great success and that it will prove of direct benefit to those farmers in the selected areas who will end up with a free farm waste plan to consultancy standard. It will benefit both farmers and the community generally by providing an assessment of the possible future value of farm waste plans. This development underlines our commitment to protecting the environment.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and agencies which report to his Department in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's memorandum on this subject which was submitted to the Environment Committee of this House in the last Session. It has now been published by HMSO as part of the Environment Committee's report on coastal zone protection and planning, volume II, minutes of evidence and appendices.

Chernobyl

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his current estimate of when there will be no restriction on the movement of farm animals arising from radioactive contamination following the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible to be precise about the length of time that post-Chernobyl restrictions will have to remain in place. However, only 138 holdings remain under restriction in Cumbria. This represents a reduction of over 90 per cent. in the number of holdings originally restricted. We hope to be able to identify further holdings for derestriction this year.

We shall continue our monitoring and research efforts to enable all restrictions to be lifted as soon as possible, consistent with the need to ensure the continued protection of the food chain.

Eggs (Marketing)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has of any circumstances under which the egg marketing regulations are regularly breached.

Mr. Curry: The egg marketing regulations are strictly enforced and where necessary prosecutions are taken. There were four prosecutions in England by my Department in 1991-92.

Nematodes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the extent of anthelmintic resistant nematodes in farm animals.

Mr. Soames: A commercially sponsored survey in 1990 by the central veterinary laboratory covering three southern English counties demonstrated the presence of anthelmintic-resistant nematodes in sheep and goats. The central veterinary laboratory is to carry out a Government-funded survey this year to determine the extent of the condition.

Whales

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Government will support a total and permanent ban on commercial whaling at the International Whaling Commission meeting in Glasgow and back a proposal to declare Antarctic waters a whale sanctuary.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 8 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Mr. Walley), Official Report, column 11.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to seek a ban on whaling in EC waters and by EC nationals.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 4 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), Official Report, column 642.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animal welfare inspections were made by state veterinary officers in each year since 1985.

Mr. Soames: The figures record the number of welfare inspections carried out on farms by the State Veterinary Service. They do not include the visits made to farms for other purposes when welfare will have been monitored.

	Number
1985	6,064
1986	5,804
1987	5,219
1988	5,670
1989	3,902
1990	4,168
1991	4,584

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Officials maintain regular contact with the Office of the Data Protection Registrar about proposals for legislation which may be sensitive in the area of personal data, and the effectiveness of the arrangements is kept under review.

EC Presidency

Mr. McFall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his Department's current priorities for the United Kingdom presidency of the Community.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 4 June, column 936.

Battery Hens

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to support the abolition of battery hens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Proposals for revised welfare standards for egg-laying hens are expected to be published by the EC Commission later this year. In the negotiations, the Government will be pressing for major improvements in the welfare standards for laying hens in all systems of production.

Set-aside

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the conditions beneficial to the environment which will be placed on farmers who will enter into the set-aside scheme agreed in the common agricultural policy reform package in May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Environmental conditions are a vital element of the new set-aside arrangements. They will be drawn up as soon as the detailed Commission implementing regulations have been agreed. I appreciate that this will not leave as much time as I would have liked to consult on and implement the new conditions before the start of the first set-aside period and there may have to be some flexibility in this first year. More detailed measures may then be necessary for the second and subsequent years, when farmers will be in a position to decide between rotational and non-rotational set-aside.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 8 June, Official Report, column 14, on bovine spongiform encephalopathy, if he will give the terms of reference of the committee chaired by Dr. Tyrrell.

Mr. Gummer: The terms of reference of the spongiform encephalopathy advisory committee are to advise the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Health on matters related to spongiform encephalopathies.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about his response to the milk marketing board's plans for reform.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 8 June, Official Report, column 12.

Clenbuterol

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will ask the Veterinary Products Committee to conduct a full review of clenbuterol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No. The Veterinary Products Committee is already reviewing licensed veterinary products containing clenbuterol to ensure they meet up-to-date standards of safety, quality and efficacy as part of its current review of veterinary pharmaceutical product licences.

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 22 May, Official Report, column 322, when he expects to complete his review of licences for clenbuterol; what evidence is being used for this review; whether he will make this evidence public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is not possible to estimate when the review of licensed veterinary medicinal products containing clenbuterol will have been completed. Licence holders are required to provide such evidence as is necessary to satisfy the Veterinary Products Committee that the products meet up-to-date standards of safety, quality and efficacy. Under the terms of section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968, the licensing authority cannot publish this information on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

DEFENCE

Defence Lands

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide tables for the United Kingdom, for England and Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland of (a) the number of defence forces based there, (b) the area of defence lands, (c) the area of defence lands acquired and (d) the area of defence lands released for each year since 1962.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many miles of new permissive footpaths have been opened up over defence lands since 1974.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Records of permissive footpaths are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total area of defence lands contaminated with mines, unexploded bombs and ammunition which have been cleared in each year since 1974; and when it is expected all lands not now used for live firing will be cleared.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The area of land cleared each year since 1974-75 is as follows:

Financial Year	Area Cleared (hectares)
1974-75	1,232
1975-76	1,220
1976-77	2,042
1977-78	1,905
1978-79	1,526
1979-80	1,993
1980-81	1,909
1981-82	1,923
1982-83	1,250
1983-84	1,138
1984-85	2,173
1985-86	1,586
1986-87	1,825
1987-88	1,384
1988-89	936
1989-90	2,272
1990-91	1,599
1991-92	1,183

On current plans, work will continue into the next century.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many foreign troops have used United Kingdom defence lands for training exercises other than in small numbers training alongside United Kingdom troops, in each year since 1974.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Training Sites

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the main sites used for training for United Kingdom troops outside the United Kingdom since 1974; and if he will list those for which future use is under review.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Under long-established arrangements, troops from the British Army currently train at various locations in the following countries outside the United Kingdom: Australia; Belize; Botswana; Brunei; Canada; Cyprus; Denmark; Falkland Islands; France; Germany; Gibraltar; Hong Kong; Hawaii; Italy; Jamaica; Jordan; Kenya; Malaysia; New Zealand; Norway; Oman; Portugal; Spain; Thailand; and the USA.

The precise date when training in each country commenced could only be made available at disproportionate cost.

The use of all training areas outside the United Kingdom is kept under regular review.

Exercise Allegiance Exchange

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the aims and objectives of the NATO exercise, Allegiance Exchange, due to commence on 6 June.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The purpose of the Allegiance Exchange exercise was to test and exercise the operational and logistic capabilities of the Allied Command Europe Mobile Force (AMF) northern contingent and allow NATO to demonstrate solidarity by the efficient deployment, employment and subsequent redeployment of the force.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by country, the number of (a) service personnel and (b) aircraft that will be taking part in the NATO exercise Allegiance Exchange commencing on 6 June.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The approximate number of service personnel and the number of aircraft which participated in the exercise Allegiance Exchange is listed by nation as follows:

	Service personnel (all ranks)	Aircraft
Belgium	203	4 F16, 1 Bell 206 helicopter
Germany	679	4 Alpha Jet, 8 UH1D helicopters
Italy	388	6 G91
Netherlands	109	4 F16
United Kingdom	1,506	4 Jaguar, 4 Puma helicopters, 6 Gazelle helicopters
United States	198	4 A10, 3 UH1D helicopters

Civil Fire Officers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list for the next 12 months the dates and venues of his Department's training courses laid on for civil fire officers;

(2) if he will list for the last 24 months the dates and venue of his Department's training courses laid on for civil fire officers; and if he will show by fire and civil defence authority those who were notified and the response obtained.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and agencies which report to his Department in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's memorandum on this subject which was submitted to the Select Committee on the Environment in the last session. It has now been published by HMSO as part of that Committee's report on coastal zone protection and planning, volume II, minutes of evidence and appendices.

Accommodation

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the cost evaluations arrived at in the course of his review into RAF MOD establishments for the provision of accommodation in the Harrogate area and at RAF Wyton and RAF Brampton.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The consultative document published on 4 June sets out the options considered and a summary of the economic appraisal. The detailed costings for each option contain information which is commercially or otherwise sensitive.

Coroner's Inquest

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to this answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 569, what were the nature and contents of his recent brief discussion with Secretary Cheney about the recent verdict of the coroner's inquest.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend and Secretary Cheney discussed press reports that the chairman of the House armed services sub-committee on investigations was making preliminary inquiries to see if an investigation would be appropriate.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 569, how many changes he has made to his policy relating to the release of information since 6 May.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on 3 June, Official Report, column 569.

WE177 Replacement

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 188, whether he has used the different estimated development costs for a possible WE177 replacement to calculate an average estimated development cost for a possible WE177 replacement.

Mr. Aitken: No, Sir. Differences in estimated potential development costs are a result of differences betweeen the programmes on which they are based. An average of such figures would be meaningless.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 188, whether he has considered releasing an estimated development cost for a possible WE177 replacement which is sufficiently imprecise to avoid prejudicing his future negotiating position with potential suppliers.

Mr. Aitken: I have considered the hon. Member's suggestion, but the relatively large difference in cost between the options being evaluated means that any published estimates would be misleading.

Defence Estimate

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to change the contents of volume 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Following a review of the dissemination of defence statistics, it has been decided to replace volume 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates with a similar publication called Defence Statistics. The new publication will in many cases provide a longer historical perspective as well as containing more up-to-date information. Some tables in volume 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates contained information that was of only specialist interest or was obtainable from other sources. These tables will be omitted from the new publication but the information they contain will either be published elsewhere or will be available on request from the Defence Statistical Organisation.

Courts Martial

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has sought or received from Commander in Chief, Fleet, about the court martial of Lieutenant-Commander Peter McDonnell; what consideration has been given to further action arising from the sinking of the Antares; what action is being taken on the information arising from the court martial concerning command of HMS Trenchant at the time of the sinking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Commander in Chief, Fleet has kept me fully informed of the reasons for and circumstances leading to the court martial of Lieutenant Commander Peter McDonnell. Both the verdict and the sentence are subject to review and Lieutenant Commander McDonnell has the right to appeal.

The Commander in Chief will also be fully reviewing the proceedings of the court martial to decide what further action, if any, might be appropriate.

Little Ferry Bomb

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the dropping of a target bomb by a United States air force plane. near Little Ferry, Sutherland on Thursday 4 June.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On Thursday 4 June, a practice bomb was inadvertently released from a United States Air Force (USAF) F111 aircraft using RAF Tain range. The practice bomb fell into woods near Little Ferry causing a fire. The USAF is currently conducting an investigation to establish the cause of the incident.

Maintenance Group

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Maintenance Group defence support agency for the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Maintenance Group DSA's key management targets for 1992-93 cover four areas of activity: performance of the group; the use of resources; the development of management systems; and management initiatives.

The group's performance aims are to achieve at least 98 per cent. of the task which represents 75 per cent. of the group's activity to standard and on time. All operational support tasks will be performed to RAF or NATO standards.

The group's resources will be managed to keep within the agreed budget and efficiency measure savings amounting to 0·5 per cent. of the cash allocation will be made.

The group plans to install prototype management accounting systems at one of its units and in the headquarters by 31 March 1993. The management accounting system will be extended to the other seven basic level budgeting units by 31 March 1994. Asset registers will be installed at all the basic level budgeting units by 31 March 1993.

The Maintenance Group management initiatives will centre on the installation of formal quality systems and the development of a total quality approach to management. Planning including investment appraisals for the rationalisation of functions and estate will continue.

Hydrographic Office

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Hydrographic Office defence support agency for the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Chief of Fleet Support, acting as the owner of the agency on behalf of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence under the terms of the agency's framework document, has revised the key targets for this year and beyond. These reflect the continuing need to secure economies in defence spending and the progress already made by the agency towards meeting those targets set at the time of its launch as a DSA in April 1990 and since.

On quality of service, the chief executive is required to continue to ensure that all immediate dangers are promulgated by radio navigational warnings within 20 hours of the receipt of information. He is also required to improve the state of revision of Admiralty navigational charts so that at 1 April 1993 73 per cent. will have been published within the past 30 years and 68 per cent. will have been revised within the past 10 years. The chief executive is also required to deliver funded RN hydrographic and oceanographic programmes to agreed cost, time and quality standards.

As regards commercial sales, the existing target to increase the revenue from commercial sales by at least 13 per cent. over the first five years of the operation of the agency will remain in force.

As regards an overall efficiency target to which the above key targets and other targets in the agency's business plan will contribute, the assumption will be that the disciplines of the "next steps" approach and the additional freedoms and flexibilities which agencies receive will allow them to do better in terms of efficiency than the rest of the Department. The chief executive is, therefore, being required to achieve an efficiency target of 3·5 per cent.—this is 1 per cent. higher than the 1992-93 target set for the Department as a whole. Additionally, the chief executive will be required to operate within the net cash allocation, which assumes achievement of those targets, as provided by the Chief of Fleet Support under the terms of his role as the agency's owner. Key targets were set at the time of the launch in April 1990 regarding the development of an improved management information and management accounting system. The implementation of the target in respect of the financial and management accounting information system will be completed early in 1992-93 and the target for the installation of a fully integrated IT-supported management information system by 1 April 1994 remains in force.

Meteorological Office

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Meteorological Office executive agency for the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The agency has been set a range of targets to ensure that it delivers progressive improvements in the quality and efficiency of weather-related services it provides to defence, civil aviation, commercial customers and the general public.

The targets set for the Meteorological Office during the period 1992-93 are to: achieve high standards of quality of service for each of the major groupings of customer; reduce net operating costs to £36·2 million—this being more than a 5 per cent. reduction on the 1991-92 forecast —increase efficiency by 3 per cent. through improvements in quality of service, increased service volumes and reduced unit costs; achieve a 9 per cent. increase in uptake of meteorological services to £16·5 million, as measured by cash revenue generated from commercial services to the public, industry and commerce, excluding CAA; achieve an 11 per cent. increase to £5·9 million in the gross contribution of commercial services invoiced revenue to offsetting core costs and overheads; and provide authoritative advice on climate change issues to Ministers and the general public, in particular to provide the most up-to-date assessment for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Performance against key targets is published in the Meteorological Office annual report and accounts, a copy of which is placed in the House of Commons Library.

SCOTLAND

Crime

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current state of crime and offences in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details of the numbers of crimes and offences recorded in Scotland in 1991 are contained in the Scottish Office statistical bulletin "Recorded Crime in Scotland, 1991", published on 22 May 1992, a copy of which was placed in the Library. I am naturally disappointed that recorded crime continues to rise, but part of the reason for this is that the public are reporting more crimes to the police. I welcome this, as we all have a part to play in the fight against crime.

Urban Aid

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether police authorities are eligible to apply for (a) capital and (b) recurring finance for community projects within areas of priority treatment through the urban aid programme; what precedents have been set for such projects; what criteria he uses to assess such applications; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following a review of the urban programme, revised eligibility and priority criteria under which financial support can be given were published on 20 February 1992. Police authorities are eligible to apply for capital and current funding under the urban programme. Projects that supplement main programmes and other provisions under statutory obligations, or duplicate programmes of other agencies, will be ineligible.

Rented Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing how many new houses for rent were constructed by (a) district councils, (b) Scottish Homes, or its predecessor and (c) housing associations in each year since 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Table 5 in the statistical bulletin HSG/1992/2, "Housing Trends in Scotland—Quarter ended 30 September 1991", gives the number of new dwellings completed by (a) district councils, (b) Scottish Homes or its predecessor and (c) housing associations for each year from 1979 to 1990, the latest year for which estimates are available. Statistics for the period up to 1979 were published in "Scottish Housing Statistics". Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Adult Illiteracy

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what figures are available for adult illiteracy in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

There is no standard definition of adult literacy and it is therefore difficult to collect comprehensive information. The Scottish Community Education Council was funded by the Scottish Office in 1990 to undertake a small-scale study of literacy and numeracy issues which indicated that 9 per cent. of a sample of adults had difficulties with either reading, writing or numeracy.

The Government give high priority to basic skills education for adults. Local authorities are currently the main providers but the Scottish Office Education Department also gives support by way of grant to organisations such as the Scottish Community Education Council as well as supporting local initiatives such as the Number Shop, the Whitfield adult basic education trust in Dundee and the Upper Nithsdale adult basic education project in Sanquhar. Support was also given earlier this year to adult learners' week.

The Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992 strengthens the position on basic skills by conferring on my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State a duty in securing the provision of further education to have regard to the requirements of persons over school age who have learning difficulties.

Rents

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the average weekly rent charge for (a) local authority housing stock by each district council and (b) Scottish Homes stock for the financial year 1992-93.

Scottish Council for Civil Liberties

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the Scottish Council for Civil Liberties; what matters he intends to discuss; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to meet representatives of the Scottish Council for Civil Liberties. If there are particular issues which the council wishes to raise with us, we shall ensure that any approach receives careful consideration.

Scottish Homes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the name, (b) occupation and (c) honoraria, salary or allowance of each member of the board of Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the (a) gross and (b) net capital allocation in outturn figures for Scottish Homes housing in each (i) district and (ii) area, expressed as a cost per dwelling unit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the (a) gross and (b) net housing revenue allocation in outturn figures for Scottish Homes housing in each (i) district and (ii) area, expressed as a cost per dwelling unit; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information sought is not held by the Scottish Office Environment Department as allocations to Scottish Homes regions or districts are a matter for Scottish Homes itself.

History

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to promote the learning of local history in Scottish (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) further education establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The content and delivery of the curriculum in schools are primarily matters for the education authorities. Studies based on local history are common in the early stages and guidance on the five to 14 curriculum issued by the Scottish Office Education Department will take account of the place of local history in the development of wider historical understanding. Courses for standard grade and higher grade may draw on local history as appropriate to illustrate topics and themes. The modular national certificate, introduced under the Government's action plan facilitates the inclusion of local history in a large number of programmes run by further education centres. Further education centres also provide bases for groups with an interest in local history.

Lord Lieutenants

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the names and (b) the occupations of each lord-lieutenant and deputy lord-lieutenant in Scotland; who is responsible for their nomination; what salary, honoraria, allowance or expenses each receives; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Lord lieutenants in Scotland are appointed by Her Majesty. Deputy lieutenants are appointed by the lord-lieutenant, once he has been informed by the Secretary of State that Her Majesty does not disapprove of the appointments which the lord-lieutenant proposes. No salary, honoraria or allowances are paid, but lord-lieutenants may claim reimbursement of expenses incurred as a result of their official duties. Current information about occupations is not held centrally. The names of lord-lieutenants and deputy lieutenants are as follows.

Housing Tenure

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the most up-to-date analysis of housing tenure type in (a) the Paisley, South parliamentary constituency, (b) Renfrew district, (c) Strathclyde and (d) Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on housing tenure type by parliamentary constituency is not collected centrally. The latest available information for Renfrew district, Strathclyde, and Scotland is set out in the table.

Waste Disposal

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the disposal of industrial, commercial and domestic waste in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: Responsibility for regulating the disposal of industrial, commercial and domestic waste in Scotland rests with the district and islands councils. Around 93 per cent. of such wastes are landfilled with the remainder being incinerated, recycled or transported to specialist facilities in England and Wales. The most recent report of the hazardous waste inspectorate, Scotland, a copy of which is lodged in the Library, describes waste disposal arrangements in Scotland in more detail.

Agricultural Colleges

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the development of the Scottish agricultural colleges.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish agricultural college was established on 1 April 1990 by bringing together into a single structure the North of Scotland college of agriculture, the East of Scotland college of agriculture and the West of Scotland college. This was in keeping with one of the principal recommendations of the Williams committee of inquiry which reported in September 1989. The college continues to operate from three centres of study at Aberdeen, Edinburgh and Auchincruive near Ayr. The college's administrative headquarters were recently transferred from Perth to Edinburgh. The college is a private company controlled by a board of directors. It is funded by the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department—AFD—to provide agricultural education and advisory services and to conduct agricultural research and development. The directors of the college have made significant progress towards developing the college as a body with a single corporate identity and in developing new services for the agricultural and [illegible] industries. In the financial year 1990-91, the last complete year for which published accounts are available, income was £33·3 million, of which £18·6 million was AFD grant.

Deprivation Relief

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to consider the implications of the 1991 census on the award of urban aid finance and other special initiatives to relieve deprivation; what criteria he intends to apply in deciding which communities should benefit from such finance in future; when he expects to announce his decisions; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details should be available by the middle of 1993 of changes to the geographical targeting of the urban programme, following the results of the 1991 census. A final decision on the criteria by which individual areas will be assessed has yet to be taken.

Paisley College

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with representatives of Paisley college to discuss university status; when he next plans to meet representatives of Paisley college to discuss university status; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 23 October 1991 my hon. Friend the Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth), who was then Minister of State, met representatives of Paisley college of technology to discuss a number of issues, including university title. I have no plans at present to meet representatives of the college.

Foxbar River Women's Centre

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current position regarding urban aid assistance in relation to the Foxbar Rivers women's centre; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: Urban aid of £81,997 for construction costs, £20,361 for equipment and, for four years, £94,308 for running costs was approved in May 1991. In view of difficulties in finding a suitable site the date by which a start must be made has been put back until 30 September 1992.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his plans to discourage solvent abuse.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Solvent abuse is being tackled with particular emphasis on education and prevention and, where practicable, the restriction of sales of products containing volatile substances to young people. A £1·4 million GB-wide media campaign to inform parents was run during February this year. The impact of that campaign in Scotland is being evaluated. Schools will be encouraged to play their part. Re-Solv, the national charity, with Government support, recently launched a campaign to make retailers aware of the problem, the law and its requirements.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and any agency which reports to his Department in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's memorandum on this subject which was submitted to the Environment Committee of this House in the previous Session. It has now been published by HMSO as part of the Environment Committee's report on coastal zone protection and planning, volume II, minutes of evidence and appendices.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Compensation Claims

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will outline the specific training undertaken by staff of his Department in relation to compensation claims; and what steps are taken to ensure the fair treatment of claimants.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Department issued guidance to its officials in 1990 on the principles to be taken into account when checking claims for compensation. Decisions are taken at a senior level, with legal advice being sought where appropriate.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are his Department's criteria and guidelines in dealing with compensation claims.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Department is prepared to consider claims for compensation where loss is sustained through maladministration by court officials in matters for which the Lord Chancellor is responsible.

Staff dealing with the justification for and assessment of compensation claims are required to apply guidelines, the broad principles of which were reproduced in the Law Society Gazette in August 1990. Each claim is assessed on its individual merits.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether (a) the remuneration levels claimed and paid to solicitors and the Treasury Solicitor undertaking work for his Department in relation to compensation claims, (b) the work undertaken by claimants' solicitors to secure financial redress satisfactory to claimants and (c) delays between lodging and resolving claims reflect in compensation and costs paid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Claims for compensation are considered on the individual merits of the case. The Department will consider payment of a solicitor's reasonable costs in pursuing a claim but inevitably the process of assessing the validity of claims takes time, particularly where it involves communication with other offices within the Department or, on occasions, with the Treasury.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to take decisions on the publication of guidelines as to the principles upon which his Department assesses ex gratia payments for compensation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The broad principles upon which the Department assesses claims for ex gratia compensatory payments were outlined in an article in the Law Society Gazette in August 1990. Consideration is being given to further publication of these principles.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Maxwell Companies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Attorney-General if the Serious Fraud Office will take steps to contact Dr. Werner Keicher of Vaduz with a view to obtaining his assistance in the investigations into the Maxwell group of companies.

The Attorney-General: It is the policy of the Serious Fraud Office not to divulge operational details relating to the proposed handling of its investigations. I am satisfied that all steps currently necessary properly to investigate the Maxwell group of companies are being taken.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide additional resources and instructions to the Serious Fraud Office in order that they can assist in the recovery of moneys belonging to the Maxwell pension funds.

The Attorney-General: The role of the Serious Fraud Office is to investigate and, where appropriate, prosecute alleged offences involving serious or complex fraud. Primary responsibility for the recovery of assets rests with the trustees of the Maxwell pension funds, the administrators and liquidators. The Serious Fraud Office assists those so engaged to the extent that it is lawfully able to do so and that such assistance does not detract from the discharge of its own duties.

I am satisfied that the SFO is properly resourced for the discharge of its duties.

TRANSPORT

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the aircraft near-miss involving a Caledonian Airways Tristar and a glider at a height of 2,500 feet at approximately 14.10 hours on 1 June eight miles south-west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne over Currock hill gliding site.

Mr. Norris: The responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority.

All air miss reports in United Kingdom airspace, involving civil or military aircraft, are investigated initially by the joint air miss section of the National Air Traffic Services, which is a joint CAA/Ministry of Defence organisation.

They are then examined by the joint air miss working group (JAWG), an independent committee drawn from a wide cross-section of responsible civil and aviation bodies. The JAWG investigation is not a disciplinary procedure; its purpose is to serve the interests of flight safety by establishing the cause of the air miss in order to try to devise ways of preventing a similar occurrence.

I have drawn the hon. Member's question to the attention of the Civil Aviation Authority and have asked it to write to him direct when the investigation into the air miss which is the subject of the question is complete.

Highway Code

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his proposals for the revision of the highway code.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend has laid before Parliament a document setting out his proposed alterations to the highway code. These take into account the many responses received to the Department's consultation document issued last October.

This has been the first major review of the highway code since 1978. The proposals contain forty two new rules and many other rules have been amended to reflect recent changes in the law and best road safety practice. We are taking the opportunity also to improve the format of the code in order to make it more attractive to the reader and so encourage further its regular use by all road users.

Hazardous Chemicals

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he intends to take to ensure that EC arrangements will not prevent the use of emergency action codes for the transportation and storage of hazardous chemicals.

Mr. Norris: My Department is working closely with the Home Office to promote the benefits of the emergency action codes in Europe with a view to incorporating them in the United Nations road transport agreement, "ADR", that is likely to form the basis of future commission proposals concerning the transport of dangerous goods. Commission officials have been involved in preliminary discussions.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

International Conventions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is currently granted by the Overseas Development Administration to help lower income signatory countries to implement action under (a) the Ramsar convention for the conservation of wetlands of international importance, (b) the convention concerning the protection of the world cultural and natural heritage, (c) the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora and (d) the convention of the conservation of migratory species of wild animals.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ODA funds a number of projects to support wildlife (biodiversity) and habitat conservation in developing countries which would assist them to implement action under the wildlife conventions mentioned. Since 1990 the ODA has committed over £20 million to such projects. Lists of projects are available in the Library of the House.

In addition, the Government:

(a) contributed about £34,000 in 1992 to the Ramsar Convention Trust Fund and gave a grant of £5,700 to support a Ramsar-related workshop for developing countries of south and west Asia;

(b) contributed about £90,000 in 1992 towards the World Heritage Fund;

(c) makes an annual contribution of about £85,000 to the CITES Trust Fund; has given an extra £40,000 to improve the international enforcement of CITES; makes an annual contribution of £10,000 to assist developing country delegates to attend CITES meetings, and has pledged £600,000 to support African elephant conservation projects, and

(d) contributed about £45,000 in 1992 to the Bonn Convention Trust Fund.

International Social Statistics

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to encourage the improvement in the coverage, reliability, breakdown of data by sex, income group and area, and availability of international social statistics.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It will continue to be our policy when considering the work programmes of those organisations of which we are members to encourage, as far as resources permit, improvements in the coverage, reliability, breakdown of data by sex, income group and area, and availability of international social statistics.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate the total United Kingdom expenditure upon overseas aid in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available from (a) Government sources, (b) other public sector sources and (c) private and charitable sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: [holding answer 11 June 1992]: Gross public expenditure on overseas aid (£ million) in 1981 to 1990 was as follows:

	Total	of which	CDC[1] project aid
1981	1,184		68
1982	1,085		51
1983	1,174		56

[1] Commonwealth Development Corporation resources include Government loans and income from investments in developing countries.

Ngamiland

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been contributed by Her Majesty's Government to the construction of a buffalo fence in Ngamiland; and what estimate he has made of the damage it will cause to wildlife in the area.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 11 June 1992]: The British Government have made no contribution to the cost of this fence, nor have they been involved in any assessment of its likely impact.

United Nations Aid

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the European Community's timetable for meeting the United Nations aid target by the year 2000.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 11 June 1992]: The European Community has not set a timetable for reaching the United Nations aid target. The Government's aid programme has been increasing in real terms and is planned to continue to do so.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inheritance Tax

89. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many landowners have benefited in respect of inheritance tax in return for public access to their estates; and if he will list footpaths to which public access has resulted from conditional exemption.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 2 June 1992, Official Report, column 399. Information about individual cases is covered by the normal rules of taxpayer confidentiality. However, heritage bodies are able to supply information about public access to heritage land including conditionally exempt land (although the land will not be identified as conditionally exempt). The main such bodies in England and Scotland are the Countryside Commission and the Countryside Commission for Scotland, and for land of scientific interest the respective Nature Conservancy Councils. In Wales and Northern Ireland the relevant bodies are the Countryside Council for Wales and the Environment Service of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost to the Exchequer of inheritance tax benefit to landowners in return for public access to their estates.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 2 June 1992, Official Report, column 399.

Environmental Costs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to include environmental cost in measures used by his Department to measure economic performance.

Sir John Cope: Exploratory work on environmental accounts and indicators is under way at the Department of Environment and the Central Statistical Office. This work is still in its early stages.

Employee Share Ownership

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees have received shares under case law employee share ownership plans; and what is the current total value of shares in such schemes.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that the information is not available centrally.

Lodgers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he hopes to bring in legislation under which home owners will be able to let rooms to lodgers without liability to tax on the rent that they receive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Members for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) and for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) on 2 June 1992, Official Report, column 366.

VAT Harmonisation

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the meeting of the Council of Finance Ministers on 9 June; and if consideration was given to the harmonisation of value added tax levels.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 June 1992]: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Luxembourg on 9 June and I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed the Spanish programme for economic convergence as part of its regular multilateral surveillance exercises. We welcomed the programme's objective of non-inflationary growth via macroeconomic stabilisation, including a tightened fiscal stance, and the undertaking of significant structural reforms. Particular attention was drawn to the importance of the Spanish regional governments in achieving fiscal consolidation.

The removal of rigidities, particularly in the markets for labour and services, combined with a stable nominal exchange rate were welcomed as policies to reduce inflation and encourage wage moderation. The scale of Spanish proposals to improve the functioning of their labour market and to deregulate services was acknowledged. The Council urged the rapid introduction of these measures while stressing their importance to achieving sustainable non-inflationary growth. It was also agreed that the Council's multilateral surveillance exercises should be strengthened by paying more attention to structural measures in promoting economic convergence.

Over lunch there was a brief discussion of Commission proposals for further loans to Bulgaria and Romania but no decisions were reached.

The Council also discussed the Commission's future financing proposals. I argued that the Commission's proposals to increase Community spending in real terms between 1992 and 1997 by about 21 billion ecu (£14½ billion)—an increase of over 30 per cent.—were unacceptable and I was strongly supported by a majority of other member states. I pointed to the findings of the European Court of Auditors, demonstrating the poor value for money from Community spending. I argued against any increase in the own resources ceiling, stressing that the Community had to live within its means and that taxpayers should not be asked to accept substantial increases in Community spending at a time when there was a need for national budgetary restraint.

On indirect taxes, the presidency tabled a global compromise covering the eight draft directives on excise duty rates and structures for tobacco products, mineral oils and alcoholic beverages and VAT.

There was little substantive discussion on these issues. I recorded the various problems the current text posed. On the minimum rate for spirits, although the proposed figure of 600 ecu per hectolitre of pure alcohol was an improvement on its predecessor (1,000 ecu), it would still require at least one member state to increase its duty rate. I could see no case in logic for the minimum rate for wine to be set at zero, but for a high positive rate for spirits. I said that there would also need to be a commitment to review the rates in the light of a proper study on competition in the alcoholic drinks market.

On alcohol structures, I argued that the revised text for intermediate products was still unacceptable since it would require products of 10 per cent. alcohol by volume to be taxed at a higher rate than a wine of 17 per cent. alcohol by volume. I noted that there were also a number of important technical points to be resolved including the treatment of strong wines, denatured alcohol and alcohol in foodstuffs.

On tobacco rates, I stressed the importance the United Kingdom attaches to an underpinning cash minimum for cigarettes and other tobacco products.

On VAT issues, I stated that the United Kingdom view had not changed, particularly on the minimum standard rate of VAT, our concerns with the proposed treatment of works of art and the need to safeguard our present exemption at import; and to ensure protection for donated goods sold in charity shops. I expect ECOFIN to return to this dossier on 29 June.

A satisfactory political agreement was reached on a Presidency package consisting of the most contentious points in the draft Capital Adequacy Directive (which will provide a harmonized framework of capital requirements on banks' and securities firms' trading portfolios in support of the Second Banking Coordination Directive and the draft Investment Services Directive). This opens the way to further technical work on the rest of the Directive. An array of important points remain to be addressed before further discussion at ECOFIN on 29 June.

I ensured that the draft directive would allow securities firms to continue to take on large tradeable positions ("large exposures"), that it should provide an appropriate treatment of reverse repurchase agreements, stock borrowing and similar arrangments, and that it should have a mechanism for convergence with wider international standards currently under development. I successfully secured all these objectives, which I made clear were vital to the international competitiveness of the United Kingdom financial services sector.

EDUCATION

Mature Students

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate he has of the number of mature students who have paid national insurance contributions and who are not entitled to claim social security benefits.

Mr. Forman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 9 June 1992, Official Report, columns 88-89.

Student-Staff Ratios

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what change has taken place in the average student-staff ratio in universities in the United Kingdom between 1979-80 and 1992-93.

Mr. Forman: Data for student-staff ratios in universities in Great Britain are shown below for 1979-80 to 1990-91:

	Universities
1979-80	9·3
1984-85	10·3
1989-90	11·8
1990-91[1]	12·3

Adult Students, Islington

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how he envisages provision being made within the London borough of Islington after 1 April 1993, for adult students with learning difficulties, for basic literacy and English, and for basic mathematics.

Mr. Forman: Under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, the duty to secure provision of all kinds of further education for adults, including those with learning difficulties, will from 1 April 1993 be divided between the new further education funding councils and local education authorities. Responsibility for securing adequate provision of literacy and numeracy teaching for adults will pass to the further education funding councils. Both the councils and local education authorities will have a duty to have regard to the requirements of adults with learning difficulties in respect of the types of education for which they will be responsible.

Section 6(5) of the Act provides that colleges and centres which do not transfer to the new further education sector should be able to apply through FE colleges within the new sector for funds to support that part of their work which falls within the funding councils' remit. The FE college will forward the application to the funding council if facilities for the kind of courses in question are not adequate in the locality. If the FE college does not forward the application, its decision will be subject to review by the Secretary of State.

My right hon. Friend will be making clear in guidance to the councils that he does not expect to see precipitate changes in the pattern of educational provision for adults. Such provision should make the best use of whatever facilities and expertise are available and should be readily accessible to local communities.

Teacher Training

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what provision will be made in the Liverpool area for teacher training; what schools will be used as training bases; what assessment he is making of the existing private studies in Liverpool developing between the Liverpool institute of higher education, Liverpool university and local comprehensive schools; if it is his intention to maintain those arrangements; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether new teacher training arrangements will be based entirely on opted-out schools.

Mr. Forth: Courses of initial teacher training are approved by my right hon. Friend against criteria laid down by him. The Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education (CATE) advises him on whether courses meet these criteria.

Following consultation earlier this year my right hon. Friend announced that changes would be made in the criteria and procedures for the accreditation of training for secondary school teachers. Details of the new criteria and procedures will be issued shortly.

Under the new procedures it will be a matter for individual schools and higher education institutions in Liverpool, as elsewhere, to work together. Participating schools will be expected to meet explicit criteria, including performance indicators. All maintained and independent secondary schools will be eligible to be considered for selection as partner schools and it will be for the higher education institutions to justify their selection of schools, in the first instance to CATE.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The Department has in the past consulted the Data Protection Registrar on guidelines for the holding of personal data on computer systems in educational establishments and agencies, about the student loans scheme, and in relation to the Department's internal systems.

The Department's procedures are reviewed annually and I am satisfied that they are effective in safeguarding personal data and in ensuring subject access.

Officials will continue to consult the Registrar where appropriate.

Engineering Graduates

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he received a copy of the Engineering Council's recent report on international comparisons of engineering graduate manpower output; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: Engineering has a vital part to play in our economy. Higher education institutions are important providers of qualified manpower, and our policies are aimed at increasing their ability to respond to the needs of industry and students. Those needs are usefully informed by a knowledge of the position in competitor countries. I welcome the Engineering Council's report, which I received on 4 June, as a contribution to such knowledge.

Budget

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out the proportion of the education budget retained centrally by each local education authority.

Mr. Forth: Information is not available in the form requested. The proportion of each LEA's potential schools budget (PSB) delegated to schools in 1990-91 and 1991-92 is contained in the table below, together with each LEA's central administration costs as a proportion of its PSB. Figures for 1992-93 are not yet available, but I will write to my hon. Friend when they are.

Footnotes to table showing the extent of delegation

1. Ninety seven local education authorities (LEAs) had LMS schemes in operation in 1991-92, and were required to publish budget statements under section 42 of the Education Reform Act. The LEAs are ranked according to the percentage of funds delegated to schools, with those delegating more at the top of the ranking order. Schemes for the 12 inner London LEAs other than Westminster did not come into operation until 1 April 1992.
2. The potential schools budget (PSB) consists of the major part of the general schools budget (GSB) – ie the GSB less expenditure on certain excepted items: capital expenditure; expenditure supported by central government grants; and expenditure on school meals, home to school transport and transitional exceptions (eg grounds maintenance). The amount which the schools themselves decide how to spend, as a proportion of the PSB, is a percentage used as an indicator of the extent to which LEAs have delegated resources to their schools. A new requirement from 1993 (1995 for inner London authorities) is that this percentage should be a minimum of 85 per cent. The percentage for the previous year 1990-91 is given in brackets. Where a figure is not given in brackets the LMS scheme was not in operation during that year.
3. Expenditure on central administration – one of the discretionary exceptions included in the PSB – expressed as a percentage of the PSB. The previous yearŒs percentage is given in brackets.

NB The percentages stated may differ from the percentages calculated by individual LEAs because of the effects of rounding.

School Places

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what powers an education authority has to prevent the governing body of a school increasing the number of places at that school above the standard number set by the education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Under the Education Reform Act 1988, schools now have to plan to admit to at least a number which reflects the capacity of the school—the standard number. Where the LEA controls admissions, a school governing body may propose that the admissions limit be raised beyond the standard number. If the proposal is rejected by the LEA, the governing body may apply to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for an increase in the school's standard number.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 446, if he will make a statement on the reasons for his Department's spending on advertising and promotion being expected to fall between 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Forman: Expenditure in 1991-92 includes spending on the teacher recruitment campaign and the parents charter. The reduction in 1992-93 is because there will not be a teacher recruitment campaign this year and there are no plans at present further to publicise the parents charter.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many partnerships have been established between the training and enterprise councils and the careers services.

Mr. McLoughlin: Pump priming funding has been made available enabling the establishment in 1992-93 of 56 careers service partnerships between training and enterprise councils and local education authorities.

Health and Safety Inspectors

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many health and safety inspectors were employed in the northern region in each year since 1987.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) field inspectors are based in a network of area offices, with the exception of mines inspectors who are organised by districts. The available information for the 1 April each year is given in the following tables:

Inspectors based in the Health and Safety Executive's north east area office

Year	Number
1987	35
1988	28·5
1989	28·5
1990	34·5
1991	38
1992	37·5

Notes:

1. Figures include factory and agricultural inspectors for all years.
2. 1990, 1991 and 1992 figures include field-based quarries inspectors who transferred to the factory and agricultural division in October 1989.
3. 1991 and 1992 figures include field-based railway inspectors following the transfer of the railway inspectorate from the Department of Transport in December 1990.

Inspectors based at Health and Safety Executive's mines district offices

District	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Scottish and North Eastern	7 6	10	10	2	2	2

Notes:

1. Pre 1990 figures are for mines and quarries inspectors. Figures for 1990, 1991 and 1992 are for mines inspectors only, following the transfer of the quarries inspectorate to the factory and agricultural division in October 1989.
2. The table shows that the Scottish and North Eastern district offices amalgamated in 1988. District boundaries were also changed.
3. The figure given for 1992 are for mines inspectors based at the Health and Safety Executive's north east area office.

Electrical Equipment Certification Service

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans her Department has for the future status and role of the electrical equipment certification service with the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are at present no plans to change the existing role and status of the electrical equipment certification service. However, the Health and Safety Executive recently commissioned consultants to review the role and status of the service. The executive is currently consulting staff and other interested parties before considering whether to make any recommendation to the Health and Safety Commission and Ministers, in the light of the conclusions of the consultants, concerning the service's future role and status.

WALES

Local Government

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the statutory responsibilities currently placed on local authorities in Wales (a) at district council level and (b) at county council level;

(2) if he will list the non-statutory and permissive powers available to local authorities in Wales (a) at district council level and (b) at county council level.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Pembrey Country Park

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance his Department or the Welsh Development Agency have provided to Llanelli borough council for the purpose of transforming the land of the former Royal Ordnance factory, Pembrey, Llanelli, into the Pembrey country park.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department made no direct contribution; but the Welsh Development Agency provided some £750,000 to Llanelli borough council under the derelict land programme for the reclamation of the former Royal Ordnance factory site at Pembrey.

Cancer

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the average cancer mortality rates in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information given in the following table relates to death rates per million population from malignant cancer (ICD140-208):

Cancer Death Rate per Million Population[1]

Year	Males	Females	Persons
1981	2,850·5	2,401·8	2,619·5
1982	2,882·8	2,459·2	2,664·4
1983	2,978·3	2,495·0	2,729·2
1984	3,066·9	2,588·9	2,820·6
1985	3,094·0	2,706·8	2,894·6
1986	3,170·0	2,609·0	2,881·3
1987	3,147·9	2,684·4	2,909·5
1988	3,189·4	2,810·5	2,994·4
1989	3,197·0	2,769·0	2,976·6
1990	3,199·5	2,673·8	2,928·7

[1] Death rates unadjusted for changes in the age-sex structure of the population.

Dredging

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy for the material dredged from south Wales ports and their fairways to be used in place of the sand and gravel dredged off the south Wales coast for use in the building industry, instead of being dumped at sea.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The majority of material dredged from harbours and ports is not suitable for use in the building industry and it would not, therefore be appropriate for Government policy to require it to be used in place of sand and gravel dredged off the coast.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy for the material dredged from south Wales's ports and fairways to be used for combating coastal erosion on certain beaches and mudflats.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, issues licences under the Food and Environment Act 1985 for the disposal of dredged material at sea around the Welsh and English coastlines. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend, the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. For my part, I am encouraging bodies with coastal defence responsibilities to liaise with port authorities to see whether acceptable arrangements can be made to use such dredged material for combating coastal erosion.

Water Rates

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing average water rates in Wales in each year since 1979 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The most comprehensive information on water prices historically, including those in Wales, is contained in the Water Services Association's publication, "Water Facts", copies of which are available for inspection in the Library of the House.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications have been submitted by health service units in Wales to become NHS trusts in April 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To date, formal applications have been received from 13 health service units seeking NHS trust status in 1993. In addition, a proposal to establish the South and East Wales Ambulance NHS Trust will be made formally within the next few days.

Details on the applications, together with the date of commencement of three months public consultation are for each health authority:

12 June 1992
CLWYD
Acute Unit North (Ysbyty Glan Clwyd)
Acute Unit South (Wrexham Maelor hospital, Wrexham)

MID GLAMORGAN
Ogwr health unit
(Princess of Wales hospital, Bridgend)

WEST GLAMORGAN
East Unit (Neath and Port Talbot hospitals)

26 June 1992
SOUTH GLAMORGAN
Llandough health unit (Llandough hospital)

POWYS
Powys health unit

GWENT
Community and mental health unit
Gwent, Powys and South Glamorgan ambulance services

No views have been reached on any of the applications. The purpose of the consultative exercise is to provide the fullest opportunity for local people and community interests, including staff at the hospitals and services concerned, to put forward their views on the specific proposals contained in the applications. Copies of the applications will be placed in the Library of the House in accordance with the consultative timetable.

I expect decisions on the application to be announced in the autumn. The outcome will reflect the representations received, taken alongside the individual merits of the applications themselves. Ministers are already on record with their commitment that no application will be approved unless they are personally convinced of the benefits to patients which will be derived from NHS trust status. This remains the position.

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what licences to control the numbers of saw-billed ducks have been issued in Scotland this year; and for what reasons.

Sir Hector Monro: Thirty four licences have been issued this year for the purpose of preventing serious damage to fisheries.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for disability living allowance have been made by people covered by the Seaham and Peterlee DSS offices; how many have been (a) allowed and (b) disallowed; and how many are yet to be determined.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Tax

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the cost to public funds of merging the social security and tax systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: There are many different options for merging the social security and tax systems; for example through a basic income guarantee, tax/credits and negative income tax schemes.

We have made no assessment of the cost of detailed options, but it is clear that such schemes could be very expensive. For example, a basic income guarantee around the level of retirement pension, could easily cost in the region of £200 billion per annum and yet still be unlikely to eliminate all need for income-related benefits.

Occupational Pension Funds

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what requirement there is on occupational pension funds to include pensioners of such funds on the board of trustees; and in what proportion.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no requirement in trust law that occupational pension schemes include pensioners on the board of trustees. The trust deed or scheme rules lays down who is eligible to be a trustee. The Occupational Pension Board considered the inclusion of pensioners in their 1989 report, "Protecting Pensions". They concluded that although this would be desirable, the statutory requirement of a pensioner from a scheme would not provide the most simple or effective means of ensuring that the interests of pensioners are considered.

The committee to review pension law, announced on 8 June, includes in its terms of reference the consideration of the role of trustees and will be taking into account the rights and interests of pensioners, as well as scheme members and employers.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the latest information available on the number of people in occupational pension schemes whose pensions are threatened because the assets of these schemes are not able to meet the pension payments and future commitments; how many schemes are involved; and what examination has been made of how far problems have arisen because of ineffective management, improper management or some other reason.

Miss Widdecombe: There are more than 17 million current members and pensioners of occupational pension schemes. We are satisfied that the vast majority of pensioners belong to schemes which are properly and securely operated. We are currently in close touch with the trustees of Maxwell pension schemes. At present, 240 Maxwell pensioners have not received payments for May and June, and a further 4,000 may face a reduction in their pensions in July. As part of an investigation of Maxwell companies, the Serious Fraud Office is looking into the reasons for the shortfall in their pension funds. However, it is too early to say exactly what happened.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of attendance allowance there are from the Seaham and Peterlee offices at the present time and for the years since 1988-89.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that information is not held about the number of such recipients for the years since 1988-89. Information about the number of current recipients is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pensioners

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are receiving the state pension from the Seaham and Peterlee offices at the present time and in the years from 1988-89.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Community Care

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what account will be taken of the incidence of rural areas in transfer of DSS funds to local authorities under community care proposals;

(2) what account will be taken of levels of poverty in transfer of DSS funds to local authorities under community care proposals;

(3) what account will be taken of the proportionately larger long-term hospital population in Scotland in transfer of DSS funds to local authorities under the Government's community care proposals;

(4) whether, under the Government's community care proposals, the transfer of DSS funds to English, Welsh and Scottish local authorities will be arranged under the Barnett formula.

Mr. Burt: The funds which are to be transferred to the Department of Health for distribution to local authorities for community care purposes are those which the Department would otherwise have expended from April 1993 on the higher levels of social security entitlement for people newly entering residential care and nursing homes.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when higher education students were entitled to receive housing benefit; and what was the maximum weekly rent for 37 weeks within one year, that a student receiving full grant and claiming the full student loan but with no additional income needed to pay before starting to receive housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: Before 1 September 1990 housing benefit was available on a limited basis to full-time higher education students provided they did not pay rent to their educational establishment. Full-time students have not generally been entitled to claim housing benefit since that date, although partners of students and students in vulnerable groups have retained eligibility.

A student under age 25 in receipt of the standard maintenance grant and able to claim benefit in April 1990, may have received some help through housing benefits in respect of rent above a level of around £28·30 a week in London, and £17·80 a week outside London. Student loans were not available before 1 September 1990.

Students (Income)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the difference in guaranteed income per week between (a) non-final year student, under the age of 25 years receiving full grant and claiming full student loan but with no additional income and (b) a similarly aged unemployed person claiming income support and housing benefit and paying an annual rent of £1,480; and what would be the difference in the case of a person aged 25 years.

Mr. Burt: It is not possible to make the comparisons requested. The level of income support and housing benefit payable to a person satisfying the qualifying conditions for receipt of these benefits will vary according to the circumstances of the case.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons (Transport)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make public the conclusions of the recent review of nuclear weapon safety carried out by his Department's scientists, with particular reference to accidents involving nuclear weapons road convoys;

(2) if he will publish the conclusions of the review carried out by his Department's scientists into the safety of nuclear warheads in the wake of the US Drell report.

Mr. Aitken: Yes, a statement of the review's conclusions will be made public at the appropriate time.

Weapon Sales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the items of information that are intended to be included in the United Kingdom's contribution to the United Nations register of weapons sales; and if he will make a statement describing public access to the register.

Mr. Aitken: The United Nations register of conventional arms transfers requires all participant states to record their imports and exports each year of tanks, combat aircraft, attack helicopters, warships, armoured combat vehicles, large calibre artillery, missiles and missile systems. The register came into effect in January 1992. The United Nations has not yet decided how the register will be published but a copy of the British contribution will be placed in the Library of the House in the early part of next year.

RAF Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by aircraft type, the number of aircraft in the Royal Air Force that are currently surplus to requirements and their value.

Mr. Aitken: The following aircraft have been declared to the Ministry of Defence disposal sales organisation as being surplus to RAF requirements, and are currently awaiting disposal.

Fixed-wing aircraft	Number
Andover C1	1
Buccaneer S2B	4
Buccaneer S2A	2
Canberra TT18	1
Canberra B2	1
Gnat T1	1
Jet Provost T Mk 3A	3
Jet Provost T3	2
Jet Provost T4	6
Jet Provost T Mk 5A	11
Jaguar GR1	4
Jaguar T2	1
Lightning F3	1
Meteor NF(T)14	2
Meteor T7	1
Meteor F8	1
Phantom FGR2	10
Sea Harrier FRS1	1
Vampire T11	1
Venture Glider	3
Helicopters
Lynx WG13	1
Scout AH1	1
Wasp HAS1	1

The condition of the aircraft varies from scrap hulks to complete aircraft.

Sales of surplus equipment are conducted on a competitive basis to maximise receipts. Information concerning prices achieved or anticipated is commercially confidential and cannot be released.

Exercise Allegiance Exchange

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by (a) aircraft type and (b) participating country, the number of estimated hours of low flying that will take place during the NATO exercise Allegiance Exchange.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The aircraft type, participating country and hours flown at low level during the NATO exercise Allegiance Exchange/Ardent Ground, which ended on 6 June 1992, were as follows:

Aircraft type	Country	Number of hours flown at low level
A-10	USA	22
Alpha-Jet	Germany	72
F 16	Belgium	28
F 16	Netherlands	26
G 91	Italy	76
Jaguar	United Kingdom	16
Tornado F3	United Kingdom	15

Model Tanks (Theft)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement in respect of the theft of two model Army tanks from a training area at Llanbister, near Llandrindod Wells, Powys; and what was their total value.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the period 11 to 22 May 1992, 88 inflatable tanks were deployed in mid-Wales to add realism to exercises involving units of the Royal Air Force, the United States Air Force and the Royal Netherlands Air Force. Of these three were not recovered from locations at Tregaron, Llanidloes and Crossgates, and are presumed to have been stolen. Local civil police are investigating. The total replacement value of the three items is £26,682.

Drugs Theft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how potentially fatal drugs used to combat the effects of chemical and biological weapons, stolen from the home of an airman at Carterton near RAF Brize Norton, came to be on the airman's property.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The stolen items were issued to all personnel who went to the Gulf during the Gulf conflict and were retained by the individual concerned as a training aid in support of his normal duties as an instructor.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the military jet aircraft that overflew the village of Clayton, South Yorkshire at approximately 15.15 hours on 26 May at below permitted height.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no reason to believe any aircraft were flying below the permitted height of 1,000 ft at the time but if the hon. Member would care to write to my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence with further details he will consider them.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is aware of its responsibilities under the Data Protection Act 1984 and will ensure that it continues to consult the Data Protection Registrar where necessary.

ROF Pembrey

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what action was taken by his Department to ensure that the land of the former royal ordnance factory at Pembrey, Llanelli, was before it was sold, free from any contamination caused by the production and testing of explosives and caused by the disposal of unused explosives;

(2) what restrictions were placed by his Department upon the purchaser of the land of the former royal ordnance factory at Pembrey, Llanelli, regarding the use or the further disposal of that land;

(3) when he disposed of the land and buildings of the former royal ordnance factory of Pembrey, Llanelli; and to whom;

(4) when the manufacture and production of explosives and all other related activities ceased at the former royal ordnance factory at Pembrey, Llanelli;

(5) when his Department was consulted by Llanelli borough council as to the procedures to be adopted for the removal of any contamination from the land of the former royal ordnance factory, Pembrey, Llanelli.

Mr. Aitken: The production of explosives at the Royal Ordnance factory at Pembrey ceased upon its closure towards the end of 1964. On 10 June 1965, 96·682 acres of freehold land there were sold to Westcol Construction. In the same year a further 516·5 acres of leasehold land reverted to the lessors, the Forestry Commission. We have no record that any restrictions were placed on the purchaser regarding the use of future disposal of the land. Due to the considerable lapse in time since the disposal of this site, we no longer have detailed records of the extent of clearance and decontamination work which was carried out on the land prior to its sale. However, our records indicate that action was taken, and that responsibility for clearance of the freehold site passed to Westcol Construction upon sale, in line with our normal policy. Following the site's sale, clearance of unexploded ordnance was carried out on two occasions: the first in 1977, the second in the period 1983-85, on each occasion following written approaches from the Llanelli borough council. We have no record of any approach from the council regarding procedures to be adopted for the removal of any chemical contamination. Responsibility for the land now rests with Llanelli borough council which I understand, has recently commissioned a contamination survey to be carried out on the site.

RAF Contracts

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of companies which now hold contracts for engineering, mechanical and communications work in the Royal Air Force and of those the number which have made significant training provision to ensure that adequate levels of skill will continue to be available.

Mr. Aitken: There are currently in excess of 3,000 companies holding contracts for work in aid of the Royal Air Force, a high proportion of which companies are likely to be involved in engineering, mechanical and communications work. To isolate these would not be possible without disproportionate cost and effort. All companies are required to possess and to have demonstrated adequate levels of skills for the work in question before my Department is prepared to place contracts with them. The training provisions necessary are a matter for the companies concerned.

Naval Support Command

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce his decision on the location of the Naval Support Command.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We expect the new Naval Support Command to be located in the Bath area. A final decision should be announced before the end of the year.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dolphins

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to support a ban on deliberate dolphin encirclement by EC nationals and within EC waters.

Mr. Curry: The deliberate encirclement of dolphins in order to catch the yellow fin tuna with which they shoal is a practice carried out by purse-seine fishermen in the eastern tropical Pacific. This method is not used by the United Kingdom fleet or, as far as is known, by the fleets of other member states, none of which fish for yellow fin tuna in that area.

Milk Products

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will detail the difference between MAFF News release 177/92, "Imports of Milk and Milk Products by the Milk Marketing Boards", and 177/92 (amended version) both issued on 29 May 1992; and how many copies of each were issued.

Mr. Curry: MAFF news release 177/92 of 29 May 1992 stated in Notes to Editors that "regulations have been issued for consultation"
etc. In MAFF news release 177/92 (amended version) of 29 May 1992 this phrase was replaced by "regulations will be issued for consultation".
The first version was based on an early draft and issued inadvertently.

In order to ensure that the correct position was widely understood the amended version was issued to the same list of recipients. This list consisted of 335 addressees on the MAFF press office specialist "milk" list and 337 addresses on the Maff press office general list. Both versions were also transmitted electronically to 200 media outlets.

Sea Mammals

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to review the system to monitor incidental catches of cetaceans and other mammal wildlife in United Kingdom fishing nets.

Mr. Curry: We are keeping the system under review.

Caseous Lymphadenitis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if caseous lymphadenitis of sheep and goats is a notifiable disease; and what is the number of cases recorded in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Soames: Since caseous lymphadenitis is not a notifiable disease, comprehensive data are not maintained.

The disease was confirmed in six goat herds in 1990 and eight sheep flocks in 1991. Movement controls were applied on 28 March 1990 to the goat herds and in June and July 1991 to the sheep flocks under the Movement of Animals (Restrictions) Order 1990. Policy on caseous lymphadenitis was subsequently reviewed and in September 1991 all restrictions were lifted.

Swine Influenza

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 254, whether he intends to make swine influenza a notifiable disease.

Mr. Soames: I have no plans to do so.

Fraud

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect the reforms of the common agricultural policy will have on the level of criminal fraud in the EC agricultural sector.

Mr. Curry: CAP reform will significantly reduce expenditure on export refunds and intervention and which will reduce the scope for fraud in these areas. The reform package will, however, introduce new measures. We will need to examine all the legislative proposals carefully to ensure that they contain control measures to minimise the risk of fraud. The United Kingdom will continue to keep up the pressure for action to reduce fraud in the EC agricultural sector.

Peak National Park

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contact he has had with the Peak national park or local farmers and moorland owners following the recent fires which have destroyed hundreds of acres of environmentally sensitive areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: My officials have been in discussion with the owners and tenants to assess the effects of the fires on land under management agreements in the North Peak ESA.

Dredging

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy for the material dredged from ports and fairways in England to be used for combating coastal erosion on certain beaches and mudflats.

Mr. Curry: It is already the Government's policy to encourage such use wherever practicable.

MacSharry Proposals

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the increase in staff required in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European Commission to implement and monitor the MacSharry proposals.

Mr. Curry: The staff numbers required to implement the CAP reform measures will depend on the precise terms of the detailed EC regulations which have yet to be agreed.

Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 18 May, Official Report, column 26, if he will state (a) the numbers of mice, marmosets, goats, cattle, sheep and pigs that were infected, (b) the number that developed spongiform encephalopathy subsequently, (c) the ages of the animals at infection, (d) the ages of the animals at death, (e) the source of the infection material and its likely infective potency and (f) the mode of infection.

Mr. Soames: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

School Playing Fields

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much of the Sports Council's grant aid has been earmarked for the purposes of identifying and listing the current stock of school playing fields.

Mr. Key: The Sports Council's grant-in-aid for 1991-92 included a specific sum of £0·5 million to cover the cost of preparing a national register of all playing fields in England, including schools.

HEALTH

Dentistry

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of dental practices in the constituency of Crewe and Nantwich accepting all patients under the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available. A survey in September 1991 of a 20 per cent. sample of dentists on Cheshire family health services authority's dental list suggested that some 87 per cent. of dentists were accepting all NHS patients and 92 per cent. were accepting particular groups of NHS patients.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental practices in the constituency of Crewe and Nantwich were treating NHS patients only in the years (a) 1985-86, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available. Dentists are free to practise privately and are not required to inform any authority about the number of their private patients.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the number, total income generated and average cost of revenue generating courses of dental treatment (a) nationally and (b) in each National Health Service region for the years 1988 to 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available on a regional basis.

The table shows for England the number of courses of adult dental treatment which generated charge revenue, the charge revenue obtained and the average cost per course of adult treatment for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90. This information is not available for 1990-91 or 1991-92.

	Number of courses	Charge revenue	Average cost per course of adult treatment
1988-89	20,410,940	£295,991,730	£28·74
1989-90	19,033,840	£369,811,560	£30·49

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental practices there are in the constituency of Crewe and Nantwich.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is not collected in the form requested. There are currently 350 dentists on Cheshire family health services authority's dental list.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of dentists received a gross income of over £140,000 in 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: Some 10 per cent. of dentists in England and Wales received a gross NHS income of over £140,000 in 1991-92.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists have left the NHS since the introduction of the new dental contract.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since the introduction of the new dental contract in October 1990, there has been a net increase of 52 dentists practising in the general dental services in England. At 31 March 1992 there were 15,532 dentists, 29 per cent. more than in 1979.

Residential Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to set up a forum of organisations with an interest in residential care.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Ms. Prentice) on 5 June at column 670.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to develop a post-qualifying award geared to residential care.

Mr. Yeo: Responsibility for promoting training in social work lies with the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW). CCETSW is currently developing a post-qualifying framework for social work staff, with funding from the Department, and from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Within the framework, CCETSW will offer post-qualifying and advanced awards to social workers, including residential social workers, who meet the required standards.

We shall be considering the qualification and training needs of staff working in residential care, in consultation with CCETSW, as part of our response to Sir William Utting's report, "Children in Public Care" published last year and to the recently published report of the residential staffs inquiry chaired by Lady Howe.

Continuing Care Beds

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received on the provision of continuing care beds within the national health service.

Mr. Yeo: The issue has been raised in a number of parliamentary questions, in letters from hon. Members and members of the public, and in correspondence and discussion with several organisations concerned with the care of elderly people.

Plymouth Community Services Trust

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she intends to take following the resignation of the director of finance and dismissal of the chief executive of the Plymouth community services trust after six weeks of operation.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not necessary for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to take any action. The appointment of the executive directors is the responsibility of the trust board.

NHS Trusts (Pensions)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards are in place to protect the pensions of NHS staff employed by NHS trusts; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Membership of the NHS pension scheme is open to all NHS staff, including those employed by NHS trusts. Pensions paid by the scheme, which is notionally funded, are guaranteed under statutory provisions.

Cancer

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the average cancer mortality rates in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The figures are as follows:

Age-standardised death rates per million population from malignant cancer (ICD's 140-208) by sex, 1981 to 1990, England and Wales.

Year	Males All ages	Females All ages
1981	2,863	2,393
1982	2,861	2,414
1983	2,934	2,436
1984	3,008	2,563
1985	3,020	2,592
1986	2,895	2,524
1987	2,871	2,541
1988	2,879	2,554
1989	2,840	2,570
1990	2,827	2,527

Note: For 1986 onwards the death rates exclude deaths under 28 days.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Land Tenure

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the method of land tenure of each dependent territory.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The methods of land tenure in all the United Kingdom's Dependent Territories with a resident population, apart from the St. Helena dependencies of Ascension Islands and Tristan da Cunha, are freehold, leasehold and Crown land. No formal system of land tenure exists in Tristan da Cunha and all land belongs to the Crown. Occupation and use of land depends on local custom and practice. Ascension Island has Crown land only.

Yasin Gulamnbi Ravat

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British High Commission in Bombay will issue a visit visa to Yasin Gulamnbi Ravat, whose date of birth is 1 June 1968, to enter the United Kingdom as a professional cricketer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, I have asked the deputy high commission in Bombay for a full report. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek support for a United Nations intervention if the Serbian Government continue with their arms build-up threatening Kosovo; and if he will support the principle of self-determination of the people of Kosovo.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A recent CSCE mission found no evidence of increased military tension in Kosovo. We are committed to the ten principles of the Helsinki Final Act, including those of equal rights and self determination of peoples, and we condemn the Serbian Government's oppression in Kosovo. This problem, and others in the former Yugoslavia are being addressed not in the United Nations but in Lord Carrington's conference. We fully support Lord Carrington's efforts. All parties must negotiate in his conference in good faith.

Kuwait

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are being undertaken by Her Majesty's Government to persuade the Kuwaiti Government to speed up the democratisation of Kuwait.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During his visit to Kuwait on 15 and 16 May my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed with the Kuwaiti Foreign Minister, Sheikh Salem, the elections due in October. Preparations are well in hand, and we wish them well.

Hong Kong

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what emergency evacuation plans exist for Kowloon, the New Territories and the inhabited islands of the Crown territories of Hong Kong in the event of a major breach of container accident at the proposed Daya bay nuclear plant in Guangdong; what practice exercises have been carried out for the emergency plans; and what insurance provisions exist for property and land owners in Hong Kong against any loss posed by such radioactive release.

Mr. Goodlad: Hong Kong has a full contingency plan in case of an accident at the Daya bay plant. The only inhabited area within 20 kilometers of the plant is Ping Chau island. In accordance with general international practice, Hong Kong is therefore planning for the possible evacuation only of this island and surrounding waters. The contingency plan was thoroughly tested in November 1990 with IAEA observers. In the event of a radioactive release, anyone whose land or property in Hong Kong was affected would be entitled to claim compensation from the plant's operator under arrangements approved by the Chinese Government.

Sinai

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current United Kingdom contribution to the United Nations observer force in Sinai; if he has any plans to change the level of contributions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The British contingent to the multinational force and observers (MFO) in Sinai is 32 men. We have told signatories of the 1981 protocol establishing the MFO that we aim to end our present commitment in October 1992.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the maximum period of time that could be allowed for Danish ratification of the Maastricht treaty before the need for re-negotiation arose.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Treaty of European Union does not provide for any time limit on ratification. Article R states:

"This Treaty shall enter into force on 1 January 1993, provided that all the instruments of ratification have been deposited, or, failing that, on the first day of the month following the deposit of the instrument of ratification by the last signatory State to take this step."

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to seek a re-negotiation of the Maastricht treaty if the Danish Government have not been able to proceed with ratification within one year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The conclusions issued by European Community Foreign Ministers after their meeting in Oslo on 4 June stated:

"Ministers noted that all eleven member states expressed their wish to see the European Union established by all member states. They exclude any reopening of the text signed at Maastricht."

We agreed that the door should be left open for Denmark. No time limit was set.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what circumstances he would seek a re-negotiation of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The conclusions issued by European Community Foreign Ministers after their meeting in Oslo on 4 June stated:

"Ministers noted that all eleven member states expressed their wish to see the European Union established by all member states. They exclude any reopening of the text signed at Maastricht."

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 358, if he will give the expenditure by his Department on press and public relations for the United Kingdom audience in each year from 1983-84 to 1992-93, budget provision.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Total expenditure by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on press and public relations for the United Kingdom audience in 1990-91, latest estimates for 1991-92 and budget provisions for 1992-93 are in £ thousands:

United Kingdom information material and related activities	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Diplomatic wing	377	430	645
ODA wing	380	501	710
Total	757	931	1,355

Figures for the years preceding 1990-91 are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

World Summit for Children

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government intend to publish their follow-up report to the World Summit for Children.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom's national follow-up report to the World Summit for Children will be published as a Command paper on 24 June 1992. A copy will be placed in the House of Commons Library and it will be generally available through HMSO.

A copy of the report was sent to the UNICEF secretariat in New York at the end of February 1992; we were among the first countries to present a national report.

Footwear Imports

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government will be supporting the EC proposals for controls on footwear imports from China.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 2 June to the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Ms. Anderson), Official Report, column 491. As regards representations, my Department have received a large number which divide basically between United Kingdom footwear manufacturers who support the Commission's proposal and United Kingdom importers and retailers who oppose it. The Government will take into account these conflicting views when deciding their attitude to the proposal, the economic justification for which has yet to be properly explained by the Commission.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Karamjit Singh Chahal

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement as to why Karamjit Singh Chahal is held in Her Majesty's prison, Bedford; and why he is under threat of deportation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The decision to deport Mr. Chahal was taken in August 1990 on the grounds that his deportation was conducive to the public good for reasons of national security and other reasons of a political nature, namely the international fight against terrorism. These grounds arise from Mr. Chahal's involvement in terrorism in this country and abroad. My right hon. and learned Friend recently reviewed the case and has confirmed that the deportation order should stand and that in view of the reasons for his deportation Mr. Chahal should continue to be detained pending the implementation of the order or his voluntary departure from the United Kingdom.

Asylum Seekers

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers (a) were placed in detention in 1991 and (b) were in detention in each month from January to May 1992, by country of origin, by length of detention and by application at port or in country.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not available in the form requested, but the table shows a breakdown, as at 31 May 1992, of the number of asylum seekers who had been detained for one month or more. Figures in brackets relate to in-country applications. The remainder will have claimed asylum on arrival.

Prisoners

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners released in each of the last 20 years from prisons in the United Kingdom has subsequently received further custodial sentences; what proportion of those starting a prison term in 1991, or the latest year for which statistics are available, had previously served a custodial sentence; and whether he will give consideration to including recidivism rates in future issues of criminal statistics.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The readily available information on further custodial sentences relates to the proportion of prisoners (excluding fine defaulters and non-criminal prisoners) released from prison service establishments in England and Wales who are committed to custody under sentence within two years of discharge. It is published annually in Prison statistics, England and Wales. Tables 9.3, 9.7 and 9.10 of the 1989 issue (Cm. 1221) provide information for those prisoners discharged in 1976-86, and tables 8.2, 8.4 and 8.6 of the 1978 issue (Cm. 7626) provide information for those prisoners discharged in 1971-75 (Cm. 7626).

Provisional figures show that 21 per cent. of those received into prison service establishments in 1991 under an immediate custodial sentence were known to have served a previous custodial sentence. However, this represents 46 per cent. of such prisoners for whom information about previous custodial sentences was available.

The offenders index yields information on criminal careers; more general reconviction rates can be found in Home Office Statistical Bulletins 35/87 Criminal careers of those born in 1953: persistent offenders and desistance (tables 2, 3, 9 and 10), 32/89 Criminal and custodial careers of those born in 1953, 1958 and 1963 (tables 2, 4, 5 and 7) and 21/91 Life licensees and restricted offenders reconvictions: England and Wales 1989 (tables 1 and 2) copies of which are in the Library.

Trespass

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986, to allow it to be used against trespassing on common land.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The primary purpose of section 39 is to restore to an occupier the use of land of which he has been temporarily deprived by trespassers. It is applicable to all land, other than a highway. Given its purpose, it would not be appropriate to extend sections 39 to cover common land where there is no deprived occupier.

Review Group

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the inter-departmental review group on the transfer of sentenced prisoners was set up; and what were its terms of reference;

(2) when the inter-departmental review group on the transfer of sentenced prisoners is expected to conclude its report.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My noble Friend Lord Ferrers announced the review in another place on 4 June 1991.

Its terms of reference were:

(1) To consider the operation of the statutory and other provisions governing the transfer of prisoners between United Kingdom jurisdictions; to identify difficulties and relevant considerations; and to recommend possible ways in which practice might be changed or the provisions amended to overcome or minimise these difficulties.

(2) To consider possible improvements to the procedures for agreeing and effecting transfers of prisoners between United Kingdom jurisdictions.

(3) To consider any improvements that could be made to assist families in visiting prisoners in other United Kingdom jurisdictions.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary is considering a report of the review with colleagues in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average length of time spent in police cells by remand prisoners within the Merseyside police authority area; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the number of remand prisoners held in police cells within the Merseyside police authority area for each of the last three years; what is the total number of transfers between police stations of such remand prisoners for each of those years; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list the total number of prisoners held in police cells within the Merseyside police authority area for each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the length of time individual remand prisoners are held in police cells and the transfer of those prisoners between police stations is not collected centrally. Data on the number of prisoners held by the Merseyside police were available centrally only from October 1990 and the table shows the total number of prisoners held on the last Friday of each month since then. The information does not enable remand prisoners to be distinguished from sentenced prisoners, but most would have been held on remand.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the number of remand prisoners held in police cells; how many such prisoners are currently being held in the police cells of the Merseyside police authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have received a number of representations about the use of police cells to hold both remand and newly sentenced prisoners in Merseyside and elsewhere. On Wednesday 10 June, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 76 prisoners in police cells in Merseyside, of whom nine were convicted and 67 unconvicted. As I have made clear on a number of occasions, I regard the resolution of this problem as a matter of priority for the Prison Service, but I have no control over the number of people remanded in or sentenced to custody.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the steps he is taking to ensure that remand prisoners being held in police cells are provided with (a) adequate exercise, (b) educational facilities, (c) visiting facilities, (d) regular contact with legal representatives and (e) segregation from convicted prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The facilities available to prisoners, and the conditions under which they are held in police cell accommodation are matters for the chief officer of the force concerned. The prison service provides for each force an experienced liaison prison governor to give advice to the police on the regulations and conditions which apply in prisons so that these can be reflected in the management of prisoners in police cells.

It is inevitable, given the size and complexity of the present operation, that facilities and conditions will vary from place to place. Police cells are not designed to hold prisoners for long periods, but I have been impressed by the efforts made by police officers to adapt practices and local conditions to suit the needs of prisoners.

Police Numbers

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the increase in police establishment numbers and the increase in actual numbers of police officers for each county since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is given in the table, which includes combined county forces and joint metropolitan areas, as well as single shire county forces. The establishment figures include the increases approved with effect from 1 April 1992. The strength figures as between May 1979 and 31 March 1992 are:

Departmental Staff

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the grades of the staff employed in C3 division of the Home Office.

Mr. Jack: On 1 June 1992 the grades of the staff employed in C3 division was as follows:

	Number
Grade 5	1
Grade 7	8
Higher executive officer	19
Executive officer	12
Administrative officer	9
Administrative assistant	3
Personal secretary	3

Prosecution Failures

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases failed to be prosecuted in the last year on record because of a failure to do so within six months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not collected centrally.

Marianela Gonzales

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to a letter dated 20 April from the hon. Member for Barrow and Furness concerning the health of Marianela Gonzales, a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison, Styal.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 5 June 1992]: A reply has been sent to the hon. Member.

Car Theft

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that all teenagers convicted of car theft are compelled to undertake community work and not excused from this due to age.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 June 1992]: Within the limits imposed by Parliament, it is for the courts to decide on the appropriate sentence in the light of the information available to them. The Criminal Justice Act 1991 strengthens the community sentences, including community service, available to the court, and reinforces the principle that courts should be able to choose the sentence that is most suitable for the offender having regard to the seriousness of the offence.

In the light of the wide range of sentencing options available for people convicted of car theft, including custody, community sentences and financial penalties, we have no plans to curtail courts' discretion by introducing a mandatory sentence for this type of offence.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Berkshire Plants, Newtownards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 505, what plant has been transferred to England from the Berkshire plants in Newtownards; how much of this plant and machinery was grant aided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Although I cannot give information on details of plant which belongs to the company, I am aware that some of the equipment involved has been transferred from the site. I can confirm that cessation of production of hosiery at Newtownards has given rise to possible repayment of grant and discussions are continuing with the company.

I am encouraged that although it has ceased hosiery manufacture in Northern Ireland, the company has made very positive proposals for the future development in Newtownards.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and any agency which reports to his Department in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's memorandum on this subject which was submitted to the Environment Committee of this House in the last Session. It has now been published by HMSO as part of the Environment Committee's report on Coastal Zone Protection and Planning Volume II, Minutes of Evidence and Appendices.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional resources will be made available to district councils to offset the increased cost of applying the new environmental protection legislation.

Mr. Atkins: There has not been any recent environmental protection legislation which would impose additional financial burdens on district councils. However, the Government proposes to introduce legislation as soon as possible on new powers to control litter. At that time, consideration will be given to whether any additional resources should be made available.

Empty Housing

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of the public housing stock, in each Housing Executive district in Northern Ireland, is lying vacant.

Mr. Atkins: The chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has advised me that at 31 March 1992 the proportion of public housing stock lying vacant in each Housing Executive district was as follows:

Mr. Atkins: Comprehensive inspections, assessment and procedure in respect of rural roads are already in place.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total budget allocated to each district office of the Department of the Environment roads service for (a) minor works, (b) major works, (c) maintenance and (d) other expenses in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins: Budget allocations are made primarily on a divisional basis. The allocations in each of the last five years were as follows:

European Community Funding

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all EC funding initiatives indicating those for which Northern Ireland is eligible and those which Northern Ireland avails of.

Mr. Mates: The European Commission has adopted the following initiatives financed by the structural funds, in accordance with article 11 of regulations (EEC) 4253/88.

INTEREREG—(assistance to border areas)
STRIDE—(research and technological development)
ENVIREG—(environmental improvement)
PRISMA—(assistance to firms)
TELEMATIQUE—(promotion of telecommunications service)
EUROFORM—(qualifications for women)
HORIZON—(handicapped and certain disadvantaged groups)
LEADER—(rural development)
RETEX—(diversification of textile areas)
REGEN—(energy networks)
RECHAR—(coal areas)
REGIS—(remote regions)

As an objective 1 area, Northern Ireland is eligible for assistance under the first 10 of these initiatives and has been allocated funding under 9; funding under RETEX is not due to commence until 1993 and decisions on which areas will benefit have still to be taken.

Community Organisations

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which community organisations, providing facilities or services for the disabled and handicapped, received grant aid from each health and social service board; and how much grant is available in each case.

Mr. Hanley: The table sets out the grant aid given in 1990-91 by the health and social services boards to those voluntary organisations whose help and services are specifically directed at people with disabilities. It does not include grant-aided schemes which are not specifically targeted but which may nevertheless benefit some disabled people.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which community organisations, providing facilities or services for the disabled and handicapped, received free health board transport; and what level of transport is available in each case.

Mr. Hanley: This information is not collected in the form requested. However, I understand that health and social services boards provide free transport to some 170 local voluntary groups throughout Northern Ireland whose main activity is the care of disabled or handicapped people but may also include elderly or mentally ill people. The level of assistance provided ranges from ad hoc arrangements to cover special trips and outings to regular provision of an agreed number of vehicles on set days each week. In some cases boards give cash grants to enable voluntary organisations to provide their own transport.

Water Rates

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing average water rates in Northern Ireland in each year since 1979 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Mates: The provision of water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland is a function of central government and expenditure on these services is an element of the regional rate struck by the Department of Finance and Personnel. The regional rate is an unhypothecated tax and there is, therefore, no separate water rate for the years in question. However, since 1991-92 arrangements have been made to appropriate in aid of the water service vote the relevant share of regional rate income. This change has been made to facilitate transition to commercial accounting procedures. In 1991-92, the share of the regional rate appropriated in aid of the water service was £107 million equivalent to a poundage of 64·38 pence in the pound while for 1992-93 the figures are £114 million and 65·63 pence in the pound.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Footwear

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has received with regard to the proposal to impose EC quotas on imports from China of footwear;

(2) what steps he is taking effectively to control imports of footwear from China.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 2 June to the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Ms. Anderson), Official Report, column 491. As regards representations, my Department have received a large number which divide basically between United Kingdom footwear manufacturers who support the Commission's proposal and United Kingdom importers and retailers who oppose it. The Government will take into account these conflicting views when deciding their attitude to the proposals, the economic justification for which has yet to be properly explained by the Commission.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Officials are aware of the need to consult the Registrar about proposed legislation or other initiatives which might affect or be affected by the Data Protection Act 1984, and will consult him as necessary when planning the collection, use or disclosure of automated personal data.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Etherington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to announce the next non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark), Official Report, 18 May 1992, column 21.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 497, if he will give his Department's total 1992-93 budget for spending on advertising and other promotional material.

Mr. Eggar: Publicity budgets form part of the programmes to which they relate. Allocations for advertising and promotional material, as for other publicity expenditure, will be made as needed during the year.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 497, if he will make a statement on the reasons for the fall in his Department's spending on advertising and promotional material between 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: I am pleased to say that the continued interest firms have shown in the Department's Enterprise Initiative consultancy scheme has been such that since the spring of 1991 further national advertising support has not been needed. As a result, the Department's publicity expenditure has been reduced. More than 100,000 applications for the consultancy scheme have now been received, and some 44,000 projects have been completed.

Cumbrian Economy

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish the report by Cambridge Economic Consultants into the future of the south and west Cumbrian economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Squire: I have been asked to reply.

We are considering the consultants' report on the feasibility of setting up enterprise zones at Barrow and Whitehaven, in the light of the wider needs of the area. It is not the Department's practice to publish such reports. There is a statutory consultation procedure before any zones can be designated.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Efficiency

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish an independent energy efficiency agency and a renewable energy agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: On 13 May the Government announced that they intended to form a partnership with British Gas and the regional electricity companies to establish an independent Energy Saving Trust to develop and propose new programmes to promote the efficient use of energy. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is considering future arrangements for the promotion of renewable energy as part of the current review of renewable energy strategy.

Planning Appeals

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of planning applications has been won on appeal since 1987.

Mr. Baldry: The information is as follows:

	Planning appeals allowed
Year	Number	Percentage	Appeals allowed as a proportion of total planning applications decided per cent.
1987-88	6,955	37·6	1·5
1988-89	7,734	36·7	1·4
1989-90	8,852	33·4	1·7
1990-91	8,871	33·6	2·0
1991-92	7,590	33·7	[1]1·9

London Docklands

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information the London Docklands development corporation collects on the number or proportion of the jobs attracted to the docklands urban development area that are (a) secured by local residents, (b) taken by those on the unemployment register and (c) taken by those that have participated in training schemes in the docklands area.

Mr. Redwood: I am advised that the London Docklands development corporation does not collect information in this form.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate total public expenditure to date on the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone including expenditure on land acquisition, reclamation and preparation, transport infrastructure including the docklands light railway and London Docklands development corporation and Department of Transport expenditure on road schemes and expenditure incurred by virtue of the business rate and 100 per cent. capital allowances provisions of the enterprise zone scheme.

Mr. Redwood: Up to the end of 1991-92, the London Docklands development corporation (LDDC) spent £217 million on projects within the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone. This is broken down as follows:

	£ million
Land acquisition	21
Land reclamation	14
Utilities and services	41
Industry support and community	1
Environmental improvements	12
Docklands light railway	40
Roads and other transport schemes	88
TOTAL	217

Up to the end of 1989-90, expenditure in respect of rate revenue foregone in the enterprise zone amounted to £38 million. Comparable figures for capital allowances are not available.

The Isle of Dogs enterprise zone also benefited from regeneration schemes, serving the wider Docklands urban development area. In addition, the Department of Transport contributed to the cost of the Docklands light railway, which serves the Isle of Dogs.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest available estimate of the total number of permanent jobs in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone that are in newly created businesses; and if he will give the source for his estimate.

Mr. Redwood: There was a net increase of some 26,000 jobs in Docklands between 1981 and 1990. There are no readily available figures of losses of jobs through failure or relocation.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much land is owned by the developers Olympia and York in the London Docklands urban development area;

(2) how much land has been sold to date to the developers Olympia and York by the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Redwood: The London Docklands development corporation has sold 31 acres of land and 16 acres of water to Olympia and York. Olympia and York may also have acquired interests in other land in the urban development area.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current estimate of the total amount and proportion of office and commercial floorspace in the London Docklands urban development area that is vacant or unlet.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have received training at the Poplar Baths construction training centre to date; and of these how many have secured employment on the Canary Wharf development and how many have secured employment on construction projects in the London docklands urban development area as a whole.

Mr. Redwood: A total of 407 people have successfully completed courses at the centre. Of these, 270 trainees have obtained employment, including 149 at the Canary Wharf development and an unspecified number on construction projects elsewhere in the urban development area.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his estimate of the number of jobs that have been attracted to the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone since its inception that have been taken by residents of (a) the London borough of Tower Hamlets and (b) the London boroughs of Newham and Southwark; and if he will provide the source for his estimate;

(2) if he will estimate the number of jobs that have been lost in the London Docklands urban development area since 1981 either through company failure or relocation; and if he will give the source for his estimate;

(3) if he will estimate the cost per job in relation to public expenditure for each job attracted to the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone since April 1982; and if he will give the basis for his estimate;

(4) if he will give the latest available estimate of the total number of permanent jobs in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone that are in companies that have relocated in the zone from elsewhere; and if he will give the source for his estimate.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend on 18 May.

Estate Action

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the estate action programme.

Mr. Baldry: The estate action programme now makes a major contribution to tackling the problems of run down local authority housing estates. Resources have increased from £268 million last year to £364 million this year. Local authorities will shortly be invited to submit proposals for new schemes to begin in 1993-94.

Homelessness

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department will publish its response to the twenty-second report from the Committee of Public Accounts on homelessness; and whether this will include the Housing Corporation's analysis of the affordability of housing projects undertaken under the new financial regime introduced by the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Baldry: The Department's response to the Public Accounts Committee's report on homelessness was published last August in the form of a Treasury Minute (Cm 1617). It confirmed that the Housing Corporation would be monitoring outturn rents under the new financial regime. This is a continuing process which will inform annual reviews of grant rates.

Housing Grants

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the component elements used in determining grant rates for licensing associations; and if he will publish the assumptions on affordability adopted by his Department and the Housing Corporation in determining grant rates in each respective total cost indicator area and for different housing types.

Mr. Baldry: Grant rates for housing associations are proposed by the Housing Corporation and approved by the Secretary of State in the light of all relevant factors, including outturn rents on completed schemes. Rates are set for broad categories of type of scheme and location so as to enable associations generally to provide housing at rents within the reach of those in low-paid employment. The Government do not publish the underlying factors and assumptions, since it does not wish to imply a view as to what constitutes an affordable rent in any particular case. Outturn rents are for associations to determine and will be influenced by an association's assessment of suitable rent levels for a scheme as well as by its efficiency in managing development.

Housing Investment

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest estimate of the total amount of capital receipts likely to be available to local authorities for housing investment in 1992-93.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of the availability of future capital receipts are inevitably uncertain. However, the department currently anticipates that local authorities in England will have access to some £1·6 billion of usable receipts to support capital investment across all services in 1992-93. decisions on spending from receipts on individual services such as housing are matters for authorities themselves.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has determined any order of priority in dealing with different areas of the country in regard to local government reorganisation; and what timetable he wishes the proposed commission on that subject to work to.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment gave on 3 June to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Robinson), Official Report, column 546.

Coastal Zone Protection

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered the recommendations of the Environment Select Committee's Second Report of 1991-92 on coastal zone protection and planning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Environment Select Committee report on Coastal Zone Protection and Planning was issued on 28 April. The Government intend to make a formal response to that report in early July.

EC Waste Directive

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment with what aspects of the draft EC directive on waste Her Majesty's Government do not agree.

Mr. Maclean: The draft Directive on the Landfilling of Waste was the subject of the Seventh Report of the Environment Committee of this House (HC 263-I, 17 July 1991) and the Government's views on the draft Directive are given in our response to that report (Command 1720, 5 February 1992). Copies of the report and the Government's response have been placed in the House Library.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received the current text of the draft EC directive on waste; when he now expects that it will be ratified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The draft Directive on Landfilling of Waste was presented to the EC Council of Ministers by the European Commission on 22 May 1991. There have been no Council discussions and there is as yet no firm date for ratification.

East Thames Corridor

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the consultants examining potential for the future of the East Thames corridor to report; and when he expects the report to be published.

Mr. Baldry: The consultants are now working on the second stage of the study and this is due to be completed by about the end of July. We expect that a report on the completed study will be published in due course.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the terms of reference and geographical parameters given to the consultants commissioned to examine regeneration of the East Thames corridor.

Mr. Baldry: The terms of reference for this study require the consultants, Llewelyn Davies Planning, to assess the development capacity and potential of the East Thames corridor in the light of its transport and infrastructure requirements and the need for environmental protection and enhancement. The full terms of reference were published on 24 November 1991 and are available in the Library. For the purposes of the study a care area has been defined which includes Stratford, the Lower Lea Valley and the Royal Docks at the western end of the corridor and the areas on either side of the river extending eastwards to Tilbury in Essex and the Medway towns and Sheerness in Kent.

Local Government Commission

Dr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the cost, under broad headings, of the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Local Government Commission is to be financed by grant-in-aid payments from the Department of the Environment. Parliament has made provision of £1·63 million on class VIII of vote 9 for this purpose in 1992-93.

Water Rates

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing average water rates in England in each year since 1979 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Maclean: The most complete available historical data on water charges is contained in "Waterfacts" published annually by the Water Services Association, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Dredging

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy for the material removed annually from the harbours and fairways of ports in England to be used in place of the sand and gravel dredged off the coast for use in the building industry instead of being dumped at sea.

Mr. Baldry: The majority of material dredged from harbours and ports is not suitable for use in the building industry. It would not be appropriate Government policy for material removed from harbours and ports to be used in place of sand and gravel dredged off the coast.

Minerals Planning Guidelines

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment further to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 377, to the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O'Brien) if he will list the names of those outside organisations and individuals who have sent in responses to his review of minerals planning guidelines.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 8 June at columns 23-24.

Bath Bypass

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his decision following the public inquiry into the Bath eastern bypass.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce his decision shortly, in conjunction with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

National Parks

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will review the procedures for closing national parks to walkers during periods of fire risk in dry weather.

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans to do so.

Halon Bank

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline his proposals for the establishment of a national halon bank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is currently involved in discussions with the producers and users of halons aimed at establishing what might be done to facilitate halon recycling and banking.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sudan

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications of the statement by Gaafar Mohammed Nimeri, the former President of Sudan, urging an armed uprising, for the United Kingdom's aid programme in the area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We closed down our development aid programme to Sudan in 1991 and have no plans to reinstate it. We shall continue to provide humanitarian aid to the Sudanese people according to needs and without political conditions.

United States (Visas)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received, since 1 January 1991, about (a) refusal of visas to United Kingdom citizens by the United States immigration authorities and (b) treatment of United Kingdom citizens travelling to or in the United States of America by the United States immigration authorities; what representations he has made to the United States Administration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I am aware of a small number of cases where such difficulties have been experienced by British citizens. These have been brought to the attention of the United States Administration. United States immigration regulations are, of course, a matter for the United States authorities.

Ex-service Men's Compensation

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making with the German Government concerning compensation for British ex-service men interned during the second world war.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There is no basis on which to make representations with the German Government concerning compensation for British ex-service men interned during the second world war. Internment is a recognised right of a belligerent in times of war.

Nigeria

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Nigerian Government about the arrests of the human rights and pro-democracy activists Dr. Beko Ransome-Kuti, Barrister Femi Falana and Baba Omajola in Lagos on 19 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have told the Nigerian Government of our grave concern at the arrest and continued detention of these human rights activists. We have strongly urged them to abide by the due processes of law and either release or try the activists under normal and fair legal procedure. We expect to make further representations on this subject to the Nigerian authorities with our European Community partners.

Lao Ambassador

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the Lao ambassador to present his credentials; and what is the reason for the delay.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have not yet agreed a date with the Lao ambassador, who is resident in Paris, to present credentials. It is not uncommon for a period to elapse between agrément, the receipt of working copies of credentials, and their presentation by a non-resident ambassador.

COCOM

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of the co-ordinating committee of western nations on technology transfer (COCOM).

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 5 June, at column 673.

Burma

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the Burmese State Law and Order Restoration Council, and at the United Nations, concerning the continued detention of Aung San Suu Kyi, and the continued killing and displacement of the Rohingya and Karen minorities.

Mr. Goodlad: With our Community partners, we have repeatedly called on the Burmese authorities to release Aung San Suu Kyi unconditionally from house arrest and to end all repression of minorities; including the Rohingyas and Karen. At the United Nations general assembly last November we co-sponsored a resolution urging respect for the democratic and human rights of the Burmese people. We also co-sponsored a resolution at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva earlier this year calling for an end to the repression of minorities, a public scrutiny of Burma's human rights record and the appointment of a special rapporteur. We fully support the efforts of the United Nations Secretary-General in securing the repatriation of the Rohingya people to Burma.

Kuwait

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from Palestinians who were born in Kuwait and who are now in the United Kingdom who wish to return to Kuwait and are experiencing difficulties in so doing.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

EC Proposals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the experts his Department consults on European Community proposals relating to issues of external affairs.

Mr. Garel-Jones: European Community proposals on external affairs cover a wide range of issues. My Department consults experts, including officials of other Governments and the European Commission, as appropriate.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of the Overseas Development Administration's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement;

(2) who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government are again appointing a Minister within each Department to take particular responsibility for environmental aspects of that Department's policies and programmes. A list of nominated Ministers will be announced shortly.

"Action for the Environment"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many copies of his Department's Overseas Development Administration's report, "Action for the Environment" have been printed; to whom copies have been made available; and what has been the cost to date of printing and circulation of this publication.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration has printed 20,000 copies of its information booklet "Action for the Environment". The publication was launched by the Minister for Overseas Development at the Earth summit in Rio de Janeiro where 2,000 copies were made available.

Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. "Action for the Environment" is being distributed to Government Departments and international and non-government organisations at home and overseas. Copies are also being sent to interested members of the public.

The cost to date of printing and circulating this publication is approximately £25,000.

EC Development Policy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evaluation Her Majesty's Government have made of the European Commission's communication on scientific and technological co-operation with developing countries and its synergistic relations with development funds—SEC (92) 677.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Commission's aim is to increase the complementarity between expenditure from the research and development part of the EC budget on science and technology programmes of interest to developing countries and EC development co-operation policies. We have welcomed this approach in principle, but are seeking more information on how new management structures within the Commission would ensure that the high quality of current activities under the science and technology for development programme would be maintained.

Disarmament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made by Her Majesty's Government of the submission by China to the United Nations Disarmament Commission on the process of nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons—document A/CN.10./166, 24 April 1992; and what submissions were made by the United Kingdom to the United Nations Disarmament Commission session held from 20 April to 11 May.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have noted this statement of Chinese views.

The United Kingdom joined other European Community partners in submitting a working paper—document A/CN.10/172 of 5 May 1992—on this subject on behalf of the Twelve. We were also associated with a working paper—document A/CN.10/165—submitted on 23 April on behalf of the European Community and its member states on the role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list by year, for the last 10 years, and for this year to date the number of people who have been (a) granted and (b) refused legal aid in civil cases.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In each of the financial years between 1980-81 and 1990-91, the number of civil legal aid certificates granted and applications refused were as follows:

	Certificates issued (thousands)	Applications refused (thousands)
1980-81	167·6	18·3
1981-82	176·1	21·5
1982-83	189·6	22·9
1983-84	205·9	24·8
1984-85	222·2	26·2
1985-86	232·4	28·4
1986-87	245·7	39·7
1987-88	245·4	48·6
1988-89	237·2	61·5
1989-90	259·2	81·2
1990-91	297·6	84·4

This information is contained in the legal aid annual reports which are available in the Library of the House. The report covering the period from April 1991 to March 1992 is due to be published on 22 June 1992.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consideration has been given to the withdrawing of his Department's circular to magistrates issued on 1 April in respect of requiring applicants for legal aid to produce recent wage slips, or proof of benefit paid, before their application can be considered.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 8 June, Official Report columns 17-18, in which I announced that paragraph 10 of the circular, which deals with the production of wage slips, would be withdrawn. If there are particular difficulties arising out of the application of other parts of the regulations, I am prepared to consider them.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to issue further guidance to clarify paragraph 11 of his recent legal aid circular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Following the withdrawal of paragraph 10 of the circular, consideration is being given to whether the criminal legal aid regulations need to be amended to ensure that they allow both for practicable procedures for administering legal aid and for proper accountability for public funds. This consideration will embrace the position of applicants on state benefits as well as those in employment. Further guidance will be issued in due course.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will withdraw the requirement in paragraph 11 of his recent legal aid circular to justices' clerks that proof of benefit level is necessary before legal aid can be granted.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Paragraph 11 of the circular reminds justices' clerks that applicants who are in receipt of certain benefits are required to provide details of the Benefit Agency office dealing with the benefit and the reference number and advises justices' clerks to seek corroborative evidence of receipt of the benefit claimed. It does not require proof of benefit level.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what consideration he has given to the effect of the Data Protection Act 1984 on the effective implementation of paragraph 11 of his recent legal aid circular to justices' clerks;

(2) what are the arrangements for co-ordinating the effective implementation of paragraph 11 of the recent legal aid circular to justices' clerks by the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Benefits Agency.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My officials are exploring with the Benefits Agency arrangements for confirming the status of those criminal legal aid applicants who claim to be in receipt of benefits. The provisions of the Data Protection Act are being considered.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate has been made of the cost to the legal aid fund of the implementation of paragraph 11 of the recent legal aid circular to justices' clerks.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The only purpose of the circular was to remind justices' clerks of the requirements of the existing regulations for the grant of criminal legal aid.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people granted legal aid were in receipt of benefit, in the last year for which information is available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, a recent sample of criminal legal aid applications indicated that, of the applications granted, just under 75 per cent. related to persons in receipt of income support or family credit.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he will increase the limits of availability for legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Most of the financial limits for legal aid were uprated in April by about 7 per cent. and the Lord Chancellor does not intend to increase them further.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the current level of legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold), on 22 May, at column 246.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment was made of the expected ability of persons detained in police custody to produce evidence of their wages for the preceding weeks, before the issue of his Department's circular concerning the conditions attaching to legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The only purpose of the circular was to remind justices' clerks of the requirements of the existing regulations for the grant of criminal legal aid. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on 8 June, Official Report, columns 17-18, in which I announced that paragraph 10 of the circular, which deals with the production of wage slips, would be withdrawn.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what information he has on the number of Queen's counsel who are (a) black, (b) Asian or (c) women.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The ethnic origin of applicants for the office of Queen's counsel was not recorded prior to the autumn of 1991, and the formal records in respect of ethnic origin are therefore incomplete.

It is, however, believed that there are at present four black Queen's counsel, of whom one is a woman, and three Asian Queen's counsel.

There are in total 41 female Queen's counsel currently in practice.

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list by magistrates court, those courts that are currently below the required number of serving justices of the peace; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question cannot be answered without disproportionate cost. The establishment figure for each Bench is a ceiling which is reviewed from time to time and not a day to day operational figure. There are at present 463 petty sessional divisions in England and Wales. If the hon. Member wishes me to give figures for particular Benches I shall be pleased to do so.

Family Conciliation Services

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the funding of the family conciliation services; and what is his policy with respect to the retention of these services.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Funding of local family conciliation services in England and Wales is largely provided by the voluntary and private sectors, although in some areas assistance is provided by the probation service and local authorities. The Government have no current plans to fund local services.

The Lord Chancellor's Department is considering their role in England and Wales as part of the wider review of family law announced earlier this year.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom delegation used both car and minibus transport in Rio at an estimated cost of £25,000.

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what matters with regard to the nuclear proliferation risks posed by instability in the Commonwealth of Independent States were discussed; and what decisions taken, during his recent meeting with President Bush at Camp David.

The Prime Minister: We discussed a range of issues, many of which were related directly to developments in Europe, including the implications of the break-up of the former Soviet Union.

CSCE

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will announce the membership of the United Kingdom delegation to the forthcoming meeting of the assembly of the CSCE in Budapest.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 June 1992]: The CSCE parliamentary assembly will be meeting in Budapest on 3 to 5 July. I have appointed 13 delegates from the Parliament of the United Kingdom. The delegation will consist of seven Members of the Conservative party, five Members of the Labour party and one Member of the Liberal party. I have also appointed a number of substitute delegates.

The following substitutes have been appointed to act as necessary on behalf of the delegates:

From the Government Benches, the hon. Members for Ashford (Sir. K. Speed), for Rochford (Dr. Clark) and for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Wiggin).

From the Labour party, the hon. Members for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) and for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross).

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the travelling and subsistence allowances payable on a daily basis to persons in public service and the standard motor mileage allowance for such persons for the year 1992-93; and how much of these allowances are chargeable to tax.

Mr. Portillo: The travelling and subsistence allowance payable on a daily basis to persons in the public service are as follows:

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the experts his Department consults on European Community proposals relating to economic matters.

Sir John Cope: My Department consults a wide range of expert bodies and individuals as appropriate.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will show for 1992-93 those ranges of earnings within which the burden of income tax plus national insurance is less than in 1978-79.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1992-93, for taxpayers of working age whose incomes have increased in line with earnings, average rates of income tax and national insurance contributions are lower than in 1978-79 for everyone except some married men with earnings up to and including half of the average. On the same basis, real take-home pay is higher than in 1978-79 at all levels of earnings.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The solicitor for the affairs of the Duchy of Lancaster is appointed to administer the estates of persons whose last permanent address was within the boundaries of the county palatine of Lancaster who die intestate and without surviving kin entitled to the estate under the rules of intestate succession. The boundaries of the county palatine are the same as the county boundaries which existed prior to local government reorganisation in 1973.

Unfortunately records do not show the number of cases arising in each year within any particular part of the county palatine.

There are a number of cases each year where kin who are entitled under the intestacy rules traced after administration is complete and in those cases the value of the estate plus interest is paid from Duchy funds to the relative concerned.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

Mr. Robert Jackson: I am still considering the proposals put forward by my Department and other Government Departments and an announcement will be made shortly.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment his Department has made of the Commission report, "Research after Maastricht: an Assessment and Strategy", SEC (92) 682F.

Mr. Waldegrave: The report was discussed at the 29 April Research Council in Luxembourg. I made clear our concern that the future development of EC research policy should be based on a rigorous evaluation of research to date, and that the emphasis should be on pre-competitive research, identifying generic technologies with a wide range of applications, rather than supporting specific industrial sectors. These points were broadly supported by other member states. We look forward to developing these themes with the Commission and our partners during our presidency.

EDUCATION

Student Loans

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students from the county of Durham are in receipt of student loans at the present and for the last two years.

Mr. Forman: This information is not available. The Student Loans Company does not collect data relating to borrowers' place of domicile.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the financial implications of the following comprehensive schools in the Colne Valley constituency taking on grant-maintained status (a) Colne Valley high school, (b) Holmfirth high school, (c) Hanley high school and (d) Salendine Nook high school; and how the funding outlined compares with what the schools currently receive from the local education authority.

Mr. Forth: The main recurrent grant for GM schools is annual maintenance grant—AGM. This is set for GM schools in most LEAs at 15 per cent. above their local management of schools entitlement. This standard cash addition helps meet the cost of services previously provided free by the LEA. There is also a smaller addition related to school meal subsidy levels in that LEA.

GM schools are also eligible to receive other grants as follows:

(i) Transitional grants to help meet the transitional costs of schools newly approved for GM status—in 1992-93 secondary schools can receive £30,000 plus £30 per pupil, to maximum of £60,000.

(ii) Special purpose grants to help with a variety of activities. For example the SPG for "development" helps fund in-service training and implementation of the national curriculum and assessment, for which LEAs are funded via the GEST programme. This SPG is paid at a flat rate of £42·50 per pupil. Other SPGs are available to help with VAT, staff restructuring and premises insurance.

(iii) There are two types of capital grant available to GM schools: a formula allocation for the purchase of equipment or small scale capital works; and project allocations for specific capital work. GM schools bid for project allocations and bids are considered in competition.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what amount of capital grant per pupil he has provided to grant-maintained schools in each local education authority for 1992-93 based on the pupil numbers as at 1 April.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 June 1992]: The table lists the capital allocations to GM schools for 1992-93, expressed as an average per pupil figure, based on January 1991 numbers, for GM schools in each LEA area. The relevant number of pupils will rise as schools join the GM sector during the year.

The figures need to be treated with caution. Because of current coverage of GM schools, figures will vary widely depending on the number of GM schools in a LEA area and whether or not a school was successful in the bidding round for capital projects in 1992-93. Bids are looked at in competition with others received from schools across the whole of the country.

Average capital allocations per pupil by former LEA area for GM schools for projects starting in 1992-93

Student Funding

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received about the future of student funding.

Mr. Forman: My right hon. Friend has received various representations on this matter. Public funding for higher education is at record levels. For the third year running, public expenditure plans provide for a year-on-year increase of about 10 per cent. Full-year student support from grant and loan is now over 30 per cent. higher than the grant alone two years ago. Our reforms have led to a dramatic expansion of higher education. Ten years ago, only one in eight young people entered higher education. it is now nearly one in four. We expect it to be one in three by the year 2000.

Ealing Schools

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 88, if he will aim to give his decision on the reorganisation proposals for Ealing's county and voluntary schools before mid-July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Statutory proposals from the five grant-maintained schools in Ealing were published between 8 and 15 May. My right hon. Friend intends to determine these proposals as soon as possible after the two-month statutory objection period ends on 15 July. He will then be in a position to reach decisions on the outstanding proposals in respect of the county and voluntary schools.

Interleukin-6

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions his Department has held with the university of Leeds in relation to the scientific work on Interleukin-6; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: My Department has held no such discussions. It is for individual universities and research funding bodies to pursue particular areas of scientific research in line with their own priorities.

EC Proposals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the experts his Department consults on European Community proposals relating to educational matters.

Mr. Forman: The Department has taken account of a variety of expert views in its consideration of new EC proposals and the implementation in this country of EC programmes. At present, the Department is supporting a major consultation exercise on the EC Commission's memorandum on higher education in the EC.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment today. He will be publishing a list of nominated Ministers shortly.

Schools (Organisation)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the proposed White Paper on organisation of schools before the summer recess; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, we will publish a White Paper by the end of the summer. This will be followed by an education Bill in the autumn.

Student Unions

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is (a) the total amount for the United Kingdom and (b) the average amount per student of local education authority payments on behalf of students to further and higher education institutions to pay the students' membership fees of student unions.

Mr. Forman: In general, campus unions are not funded by membership fees but by block grant from their parent institutions. In higher education institutions, block grant is paid out of general funds including funding council grant and fees. In further education, the block grant is usually derived from an element within the student registration fee.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will revise the criteria for school playing fields so as to provide larger areas of playing fields.

Mr. Forth: The current review of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 is considering school playing field provision as part of its programme of work.

The results of the review are expected to be available later this year.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Fraud

33. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General what new proposals he has to reduce the levels of crimes of fraud.

The Solicitor-General: The Serious Fraud Office and the fraud investigation group of the Crown prosecution service are designed to deter the incidence of serious fraud by providing for effective investigation and prosecution.

34. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the number of (a) prosecutions and (b) inquiries launched by the Serious Fraud Office in 1992 to date.

The Attorney-General: In 1992, 16 prosecutions have been completed by the Serious Fraud Office. Of the 23 investigations currently in hand, 16 have been commenced in 1992. These are either new inquiries or are extensions of pre-existing investigations.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The legal secretariat to the Law Officers, the Treasury Solicitor's Department, the Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office are aware that systems involving the collection, use or disclosure of automatically processed personal data must comply with the Data Protection Act 1984. Each Department is registered in accordance with the Act and each Department consults the Data Protection Registrar as necessary at the planning stage of any such systems.

Criminal Justice

Mrs. Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General what suggestions for reform he has made to the Royal Commission on the Criminal Justice System.

The Attorney-General: My predecessor submitted written evidence to the Royal Commission on criminal justice dealing with the law and practice relating to the disclosure by the prosecution of material to the defence. Extensive written evidence has also been submitted by the Director of Public Prosecutions and by the director of the Serious Fraud Office. Copies of the evidence of the Attorney-General and the Director of Public Prosecutions are available in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Government are again appointing a Minister within each Department to take particular responsibility for environmental aspects of that Department's policies and programmes. A list of nominated Ministers will be announced shortly.

The work of the legal secretariat to the Law Officers, the Treasury Solicitor's Department, the Crown Prosecution Service and Serious Fraud Office does not have direct environmental implications, but each of the Departments has taken steps in its purchasing, energy use, and waste management policies to promote good practice in relation to the environment. Each of the Departments uses recycled paper products wherever practicable. Low-energy light bulbs are in use at the Serious Fraud Office and are being fitted in the Treasury Solicitor's Department and legal secretariat to the Law Officers. In the Crown Prosecution Service a computerised estate management information system is being developed to include data on energy consumption and costs for all CPS buildings. In relation to energy use, each of the Departments is committed to taking part in the Government's campaign to achieve savings of 15 per cent. in the total energy bill for the Government estate over a five-year period.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Targeting

39. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the Overseas Development Agency budget is targeted towards the poorest countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We spend about 75 to 80 per cent. of our bilateral aid on the poorest countries.

Southern Africa (Drought)

40. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effects of the drought in southern Africa and on United Kingdom assistance to those countries suffering the most.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: With food production in the region at less than half the normal level this year and with up to 18 million people at serious risk, the drought remains a matter of grave concern. In response to the crisis, the Government have pledged from the bilateral programme food aid, balance of payments support and other assistance totalling £34 million so far this year, in addition to our share of the special food aid programme of the European Community worth £27·5 million.

Kenya

41. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy for assisting Kenya with a view to enabling refugee children from the Sudan to be cared for locally whilst the current situation persists.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As I told the House on 9 June, we have contributed £1 million to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees appeal for assistance to refugees in Kenya, which includes the needs of the Sudanese children.

Population Policies

42. Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what priority he intends to give to population policies during the United Kingdom presidency of the EC Development Council.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A high priority. We aim to have a resolution agreed by the Development Council encouraging the Community to provide more support to population programmes in developing countries.

Know-how Funds

43. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives are planned to be introduced to expand the application of know-how funds in eastern Europe.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund is going well and is much appreciated in central and eastern Europe. At present we have no plans to expand its scope: the country coverage is kept under careful review.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

11. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much his Department estimates that the proposed national lottery, once in operation, could raise for good causes.

Mr. Key: It is too soon to say. However, we intend the lottery to be a full-blooded success, raising hundreds of millions of pounds for good causes. The distribution of the proceeds between beneficiaries, prizes, tax and operating costs has not yet been established.

Football (Televising)

12. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on his policy for the televising of football.

Mr. Mellor: Viewers and listeners should have the best possible range of choice.

Arts, Grimsby

13. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to encourage the arts in Grimsby.

Mr. Key: Detailed funding decisions are for the Yorkshire and Humberside regional arts board. It supports the south bank jazz festival and a variety of other arts projects in Grimsby.

Museums and Galleries (Admission Charges)

14. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he plans to meet the directors of the national museums and galleries to discuss admission charges.

Mr. Key: My regular meetings with directors confirm that our present policy of allowing directors and trustees to make their own decisions on admission charges is working well.

Industrial Heritage

16. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what new initiatives he proposes to introduce to secure the preservation of sites of industrial heritage.

Mr. Key: I visited Burnley in my former capacity as a Minister in the Department of the Environment and was impressed by the work being done there to preserve its unique industrial heritage.

Preservation of the industrial heritage is best secured by bringing it fully within our established system for preserving heritage sites. We are supporting work on the extension of the National Archaeology Record up to 1945; we are funding the Association for Industrial Archaeology's project to help build a better database; and we have agreed with English Heritage that industrial monuments should be given greater priority in its grant programmes.

Arts and Media

17. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he last met the chairman of the Arts Council to discuss the national arts and media strategy document.

28. Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he last met the chairman of the Arts Council to discuss the national arts and media strategy documents.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Hall).

Tourism

18. Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will assess for the most recent year available the contribution made to the United Kingdom economy by the tourism industry.

Mr. Key: Tourism is an important contributor to the United Kingdom economy, and it is estimated that domestic and overseas tourists together spent £25 billion in 1991, equivalent to 4 per cent. of the gross domestic product. There were also about 1·5 million employees in employment in tourism-related industries in June 1991 and 183,000 self-employed in these industries in spring 1991.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will set out his policies on tourism.

Mr. Key: Tourism is a successful industry whose enterprise creates wealth and jobs throughout the United Kingdom. It is our heritage, sport and culture which help to make this country so attractive to visitors, and we intend to make the most of the links between the different responsibilities of the Department to ensure that the industry continues to prosper. In common with our other responsibilities, policies on tourism will be reviewed to ensure that taxpayers money is being spent in the most appropriate and cost-effective way.

Woolwich Arsenal

19. Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the importance for the national heritage of the buildings on the royal arsenal site at Woolwich.

Mr. Key: Eighteen buildings on the royal arsenal site at Woolwich have been assessed as being of special architectural or historical interest and placed on the statutory list.

Arts (Funding)

20. Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much funding the private sector has provided for the arts for each pound of Government funding.

Mr. Key: In 1991-92 almost £6·3 million was directly generated by a Government investment of over £3 million in the business sponsorship incentive scheme. Figures for annual private sector sponsorship for that period are not yet available; however annual business sponsorship of the arts, including corporate membership, for 1990-91 amounted to some £57·2 million compared with only £500,000 in 1976.

Works of Art (Indemnity Scheme)

21. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will introduce a national indemnity scheme for works of art on loan to and from galleries and museums.

Mr. Key: A national indemnity scheme has been in operation since 1980, established under the National Heritage Act 1980. The Government indemnity scheme, as it is called, relieves both national and non-national museums and galleries of the need to take out commercial insurance to cover items on loan for the public benefit.

BBC Funding

23. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the Government's policy towards the funding of the BBC.

Mr. Mellor: Our policy is that the television licence fee should remain for the time being the principal means of financing the BBC. The longer-term future of the licence fee will be considered as part of the review of the BBC"s charter which is due to expire in 1996.

BBC Licence Fee

24. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to discuss the licence fee with the chairman of the BBC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I have regular discussions with the chairman of the BBC. Licence fee increases are based on the annual increase in the retail prices index as at the preceding September, in the same way as rises in pensions and other state benefits. I intend to reassess the position in advance of the fee increase due in 1994. The longer-term future of the fee will be considered as part of the review of the BBC's royal charter which expires in 1996.

European Arts Festival

26. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will outline plans for the European festival of arts taking place during the British presidency of the EC.

Mr. Mellor: The European arts festival will run for the duration of the presidency across the four countries of the United Kingdom. It will celebrate the rich European culture heritage through a wide range of more than 600 events covering all the art forms, traditional and new.

It is by design a festival with broad popular appeal. It contains something for everyone, whatever their age and tastes. It has a special emphasis on young people. All 35,000 maintained schools and the main national youth organisations have been invited to take part. It will also bring to the United Kingdom some of Europe's finest companies.

The programme for the festival is currently being printed. I shall ensure that all Members of the House receive a personal copy.

Urban Regeneration Agency

27. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will be meeting the new head of the urban regeneration agency to discuss the development of vacant derelict public land for recreation purposes.

Mr. Key: My right hon. and learned Friend and I will be very ready to meet Mr. Walker, once the urban regeneration agency is established, to discuss issues of common concern.

BBC Staff Cuts

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the proposed cuts in staff at the BBC.

Mr. Mellor: It is for the BBC, as a public corporation independent of the Government, to decide how many staff it needs to meet its obligations, but we support the initiatives the BBC has launched to increase efficiency and ensure better value for money.

Foundation for Sports and the Arts

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage to whom the Foundation for Sports and the Arts is accountable; how it decides on the allocation of its grants; what sums have been allocated; and if he will make a statement on the operation of the FSA.

Mr. Key: The Foundation for Sport and the Arts is an independent body and its grants are made at the absolute discretion of the trustees within the terms of the foundation's trust deed. Before taking decisions, the trustees may seek advice, in the case of sport from the Sports Council and the governing bodies of sports. My Department holds observer status at the meeting of the trust and its working parties.

Up to 5 April 1992, the FSA had allocated grants totalling £37·5 million.

Works of Art (Exports)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to list works of art to prevent their export.

Mr. Key: I refer to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) on 5 June 1992, Official Report, columns 646-47.

Departmental Environment Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Government are again appointing a Minister within each Department to take particular responsibility for environmental aspects of that Department's policies and programmes. A list of nominated Ministers will be announced shortly.

Press Complaints Commission

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the Press Complaints Commission's monitoring of articles referring to members of the royal family and their personal lives.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 11 June 1992]: The means by which the Press Complaints Commission monitors press articles and secure compliance with the code of practice framed by the newspaper and periodical industry are matters for the commission, not the Government. The statement issued by the commission on 8 June has attracted much interest. We will be taking the commission's views into account in the forthcoming review of press self-regulation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fireworks

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for limitations on the maximum noise emitted by imported fireworks, with particular reference to bangers imported from the People's Republic of China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: To comply with the general safety requirement of the Consumer Protection Act 1987, all imported fireworks are required to conform to the British standard for fireworks. This limits the explosive content of bangers which in effect limits the noise of the explosion. The United Kingdom is currently taking part in discussions to develop a European standard on fireworks, which will include restrictions on the maximum noise emitted.

Private Telephone Networks

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies have (a) applied for and (b) been granted a licence from his Department for residential and business customer access to their private telephone network in the last 12 months.

Mr. Leigh: Of the 37 applications received by 11 June 1992, my Department issued eight new telecommunications licences to companies who wish to take advantage of the liberalisations announced in the duopoly review last year.

The Government liberalised the use of private networks in 1989 under a "class" licence. Several companies have taken advantage of this to provide a range of services to the public. Some companies have now applied for individual licences to provide services which are beyond the scope of the existing class licence, but which are permissible under individual licences since the duopoly review. These applications are under consideration.

Power Stations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy concerning the burning of orimulsion in power stations.

Mr. Eggar: The type and quantity of fuel used by the electricity generators is an operational matter for the companies concerned, subject to emission limits imposed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what in his estimate of the number of power stations in Wales that are fired by, or are planned to be fired by, gas; if he will give their locations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 has been granted to two gas-fired power stations in Wales, namely to the Deeside Power Development Company Ltd to construct and operate a 450 MW combined cycle gas turbine—CCGT—station at Deeside, Clwyd and to Texaco Ltd to construct and operate an 1100 or 1280 MW CCGT station at Angle bay, Dyfed. I understand that the Shotton Paper Company Ltd has obtained the necessary permission under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to construct a 200 MW station at Shotton, Clwyd.

My right hon. Friend is currently considering an application from PowerGen plc to construct a 1350 MW CCGT station at Connah's Quay, Clwyd. He is also considering an application from the Deeside Power Development Company Ltd to increase the output of the proposed Deeside station to 500 MW.

Cars

Mr. Milligan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what progress is being made in reducing British pre-tax car prices to the levels that prevail in the European Community;

(2) if he will make a statement on the progress being made in promoting a parallel trade in importing cars from the European Community.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: On 6 May my right hon. Friend announced that he had asked the Director General of Fair Trading: to begin discussions with car suppliers with a view to implementing the recommendations in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's February report on the supply of new cars; and for advice on whether any further action should be taken. The MMC recommendations will contribute to increasing competition with potential benefits in the prices paid by consumers. My right hon. Friend also welcomed Sir Leon Brittan's statement on the EC study of car prices, in which Sir Leon drew attention to EC rules facilitating parallel imports within the single market. Sir Leon has called on manufacturers to ensure that cars are made available to fulfil demand for such imports.

Mr. Eggar: Decisions on whether information on civil nuclear matters can be released to Parliament are taken on the merits of the case. It is, therefore, not possible to define in general terms matters on which it would be inappropriate to release information.

Insurance Claims

Mr. David Martin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will meet the Association of British Insurers to discuss strengthening the guidelines on meeting insurance claims to avoid undue delay in settlement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. I have no evidence that the guidelines need strengthening.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much he is spending on the rental of accommodation in London for his Department; and what is the highest rental charge he is paying per square foot for accommodation.

Mr. Eggar: My Department occupies property in London which is allocated to it by the Department of Environmental Property Holdings which is responsible for paying rentals to landlords. Rental charges are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the cost of the refurbishment of his Department's accommodation in London.

Mr. Eggar: I do not have firm plans to pay for refurbishing accommodation in London.

Departmental Environment Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to a similar question given today by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 12 June 1992]: The inspectors have been appointed to investigate the affairs and membership of Mirror Group Newspapers plc.

The powers contained in section 433 of the Companies Act 1985 are available if necessary.

Regional Policy

Mr. McCartney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next intends to meet representatives of the European Commission to discuss regional policy; and if he will ensure that this meeting is held at a venue in the north west of England.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 10 June 1992]: At present my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has no immediate plans to meet Commissioner Millan but I expect to do so in the course of the meetings between the UK presidency and the Commission on 1 July in London.

Generating Plants

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many planning applications are outstanding for gas fired power stations; and if he will give their locations.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Edmonton on 8 June Official Report, column 31.

My right hon. Friend is also considering an application from Kelt UK Ltd to construct and operate an open cycle gas turbine power station in Ryedale.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Greyhound Racing

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the payments made by off-course bookmakers to greyhound racing since 1 April following the reduction in general betting duty.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him on 11 June, at column 234.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the funds resulting from the quarter per cent. reduction in general betting duty has been set aside as part of the 31st betting levy scheme; whether the sum made available to greyhound racing will be proportionate to the amount of off-course betting duty attributable to greyhound racing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The determination of the 31st levy scheme took into account the reduction in general betting duty on horserace bets, estimated to represent about 72 per cent of total off-course betting turnover in 1990-91. The size of any voluntary payments by bookmakers to greyhound racing following the reduction in general betting duty is a matter for negotiation between the two parties. We understand that those negotiations are under way and have asked to be informed of the outcome.

Asylum Seekers

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the asylum decisions made between December 1991 and April 1992 related to applications made before 1 November 1991; and how many of these applications were given refugee status, exceptional leave to remain, third country refusals and paragraph 101 refusals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on decisions taken between December 1991 and April 1992 is given in the table. Information on the date of application is not yet available, but it is likely that, during this period, the great majority of substantive grants and refusals of asylum and exceptional leave related to applications made before 1 November 1991. The exception would be in those cases where priority was given because the applicant was detained or had arrived from a safe third country.

Decisions made under paragraph 101 of the Immigration Rules will include both applications made before and after 1 November 1991.

Decisions on asylum applications, excluding dependants, December 1991 to April 1992

	Number
Granted asylum	252
Granted exceptional leave	2,284
Refused asylum and exceptional leave	853
Refused on safe third country grounds	274
Refused under paragraph 101 of the immigration rules[1]	5,662

[1] For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period.

Mr. Jack: In 1990 four people were removed under this provision to Nigeria, two cases, Hong Kong and Saudia Arabia.

In 1991 five people were removed under this provision to Germany, two cases, Ghana, Hungary and the United States of America.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a request was received from the British High Commission in Zambia for inquiries to be made following an application to enter the United Kingdom as a priest from Mr. Ismail Ebrahim Bhulla (Ref. GV100/13333); when the reply was sent to Zambia; what recommendation has been made on this application; when a decision is to be considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The high commission referred the application on 20 February and the request was received in the Home Office on 3 March. I am sorry that there was a delay in dealing with the case. I shall resolve the application as quickly as possible and I will write to the hon. Member when we have done so.

Strip Searches

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of strip searches made on women inmates in prisons in England and Wales in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Prison establishments are not required to maintain records of all strip searches made on women prisoners. However, they do maintain records of strip searches of female inmates in category A. There were 103 such searches in 1989, 136 in 1990 and 189 in 1991.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the Arson Prevention Bureau; and what success has been achieved in the improved protection of premises, especially school buildings, countering fraudulent arson and improvements in the methods of fire investigations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Arson Prevention Bureau, which is jointly funded by the Home Office and the Association of British Insurers, was officially launched in February 1991. The bureau provides the first concerted approach to combating the crime of arson. A research project has been completed on the protection of property against arson and further projects on arson for insurance fraud purposes, and arson in schools are under way. It is hoped as a result of the latter project to be able to recommend a package of measures which will lead to a reduction in the heavy incidence of school arson.

The Arson Prevention Bureau has recently published its first annual review, and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Police Cells

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women being held in police cells at police stations in England and Wales on 8 June.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of police stations in Northumbria that are holding prisoners on remand; and how many are being held at each station.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows police stations in Northumbria where prisoners who should otherwise have been in prison were being held on Wednesday 10 June.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Murder

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to set up a royal commission on the issue of provocation as it applies to women using it as a defence against murder charges.

Mr. Jack: There are no such plans, but this branch of the criminal law is kept under careful review.

EC Proposals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the experts his Department consults on European Community proposals relating to security and immigration matters.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Co-operation among the Twelve on these matters generally takes place outside the framework of the treaty of Rome. In considering proposals, the Home Office consults closely with other interested Departments and with the police service as well as relying on its own expertise.

North Wales Police

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to make his decision concerning the application by the North Wales police for 58 police posts for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The North Wales application, together with applications from 40 other police

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to visit the headquarters of the North Wales police.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so at present.

Departmental Environment Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are appointing a Minister within each Department to take particular responsibility for environmental aspects of the Department's policies and programmes. A list of nominated Ministers will be announced shortly.

Blakenhurst Prison

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Government are yet in a position to make a statement about the standard of service which will be expected of a private sector company contracted to run Blakenhurst prison.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Work has now been completed on the specification for the operation of Blakenhurst prison under private sector management and for the selection and training requirements for prisoner custody officers. This forms part of the invitation to tender issued to the potential contractors and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House. A draft order to extend contracting-out to prisons holding sentenced prisoners has been laid and the House will shortly have an opportunity to debate the matter. Subject to parliamentary approval, and the receipt of satisfactory tenders which offer value for money, we would aim to award a contract in the autumn with a view to Blakenhurst becoming operational next spring.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate the number of patients each health and social services board in Northern Ireland intends to send to (a) Great Britain and (b) elsewhere for cardiac surgery during the current year; what is the average cost per patient from each board area; and what is the average cost per patient in the present year for such surgery in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The number of patients for whom boards have already negotiated contracts for treatment in Great Britain for cardiac surgery in 1992-93 is as follows:

Board	Number
Northern	30
Southern	26
Eastern	20
Western	30

Further patients may be sent to Great Britain later in the year, but details are not yet available. They are not likely to send any patients outside the United Kingdom for cardiac surgery this year.

It is not possible to provide a meaningful average cost for each patient since the cost is influenced by a number of factors which vary from patient to patient. These factors include the severity and type of cardiac disease, the amount of clinical re-assessment which may be necessary before the operation, and the volume of patients for whom a particular contract is being negotiated. On this basis, average costs vary from £3,500 to £5,000 per patient.

Cardiac surgery performed in Northern Ireland, is only carried out at the Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast and the average costs per patient this year are likely to be around £6,800.

Lignite Reserves

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the private sector will be given the opportunity to develop Ballymoney lignite reserves.

Mr. Atkins: A prospecting licence for the Ballymoney lignite field is held by Meekatharra (NI) Ltd. Any development of the field would require a mining licence and planning permission. No application for either has been received.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assurances have been given to the owners of power stations in Northern Ireland with regard to the future utilisation of lignite reserves at Ballymoney for generating electricity.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Council Tenants

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to introduce into Northern Ireland the cash incentive scheme to provide grants for council tenants to buy homes.

Mr. Atkins: I have no plans to do so.

Caravans

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will give urgent consideration to introducing legislation which will give (a) greater tenancy security for caravan owners or leaseholders on licensed caravan sites and (b) greater protection against financial exploitation arising from rental increases by site owners or managers.

Mr. Atkins: I have no plans to do so.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to include financial incentives for investment in energy efficiency in the proposed electricity privatisation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The transmission and public electricity supply licence published on 31 March 1992, contains a number of financial incentives to encourage NIE plc to promote energy efficiency. The most significant of these is the imposition of a total revenue cap on NIE plc's transmission and distribution business. Copies of the licence are available in the Library.

Schools

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils are at each of (a) the primary and (b) the secondary schools in the constituency of Strangford in (i) the maintained, (ii) the controlled and (iii) the integrated sectors of education.

Widgery Tribunal

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations the Government have received in 1992 concerning the 1972 Widgery tribunal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: The Prime Minister has received one letter from the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) calling for the Widgery tribunal's findings to be re-examined. The previous and present Secretary of State for Northern Ireland received two similar letters. In addition, a number of letters on the general subject of "Bloody Sunday" have been received.

Departmental Environment Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have recently been appointed as the Minister for these policies within Northern Ireland. I am now taking forward the policies outlined in the White Paper on "This Common Inheritance" and the first-year report on that White Paper, as they relate to Northern Ireland.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the current number of applications still outstanding for disabled living allowance on 1 April, 1 May and 1 June, together with the weekly average for that period of (a) applications submitted and (b) applications cleared.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what measures his Department are considering to simplify the application procedures for the disability working allowance, disability living allowance and attendance allowance;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect on the take-up of benefits of the design of the application forms for disability living allowance and disability working allowances.

Mr. Scott: The introduction of the new claims process for disability living allowance, attendance allowance and disability working allowance has been widely welcomed by both disabled people and their organisations as better meeting the needs of disabled people and putting greater reliance on what they have to say about their own disabilities. Nevertheless, we are monitoring closely the effectiveness of the claim packs and process.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals have been heard by the disability appeal tribunals to date; what percentage of these have concerned (a) disability living allowance care component and (b) disability living allowance mobility component; and how many more are listed for hearing.

Mr. Scott: I have been informed by the office of the president of the Independent Tribunal Service that up to 10 June 1,436 appeals have been heard by disability appeal tribunals. These were all mobility allowance appeals.

On 8 June there were 317 cases listed for hearing.

Social Fund

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support were repaying social fund loans during March; and how many of these were (a) under 60 years, (b) over 60 years and (c) in receipt of a disability premium.

Mr. Scott: The information available is in the table. It is not possible to isolate the figures for income support recipients alone.

	Number
Total loans being repaid	589,758
Loans being repaid by people under 60 (including people in receipt of Disability Premium)	571,911
Loans being repaid by people over 60	17,847
Loans being repaid by people in receipt of Disability Premium	33,857

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Moray of 8 June, Official Report, column 6, what was the 1992-93 social fund allocation; what was the total of social fund payments made in 1991-92, adjusted for inflation; and what is the difference between the estimated monthly social fund expenditures for 1992-93 and those of March 1992 expenditures.

Mr. Scott: Information about 1991-92 was contained in my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 2 June at column 481. Details of social fund discretionary budget allocations and discretionary monthly expenditure are in the Library. Monthly expenditure for 1992-93 will not be known until the end of the financial year.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing (a) the gross and (b) the net social fund budget on a per capita basis of the number of income support claimants in (i) cash and (ii) real terms for the years 1988-89, 1989-90, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: Information on social fund expenditure in relation to income support caseload is in the table, except for 1992-93 for which information will not be available until the end of the year. Any comparison between net expenditure in 1988-89 and subsequent years should take into account the substantial additional expenditure made possible by the recycling of money received from loan repayments since 1988-89, as reflected within the higher gross amounts.

Social Fund Expenditure Per Capita of Income Support Caseload

	1988-89 £	1989-90 £	[1]1991-92 £
Gross	46·64	57·76	70·12
Gross 1992-93 Prices[1]	60·14	69·87	73·28
Net	35·27	31·53	39·97
Net 1992-93 Prices[1]	45·47	38·14	40·97

[1] Provisional

Real terms figures have been calculated using the current GDP deflator and may alter.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the administrative cost is as a proportion of expenditure on the social fund for each year since its inception, including a forecast for 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: Information on social fund expenditure and administration costs for 1988-89 to 1990-91 is in the Library. Details of administration costs for 1991-92 are not yet available. No forecast has been made for 1992-93.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the study into the social fund commissioned from the University of York's social policy research unit.

Mr. Scott: We expect the report to be published before the summer recess.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disability living allowance claims have been refused as a result of the application not being made within the three-month qualifying period; and what information is sent to people whose claims are unsuccessful for this reason.

Mr. Scott: There have been no such cases. An application for disability living allowance may be made at any time. If the three-month qualifying period has not been completed at the date of application, provided the adjudication officer is satisfied that the customer meets the conditions of entitlement, an award may be made from the earliest date that it is completed.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many reviews for attendance allowance are outstanding as a result of the introduction of disability living allowance; and what is the target time for the processing of these reviews.

Mr. Scott: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the target of clearing 60 per cent. of disability living allowance claims within 30 days is now being met.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the estimate in the 1990 White Paper "The Way Ahead" of the number of people that would benefit from the lower rate of disability living allowance for care or mobility costs has been met.

Mr. Scott: That estimate was for 1993-94. It is too soon to measure performance against such longer term targets.

Independent Living Fund

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people received help from the independent living fund during 1991-92; what was the average weekly amount awarded; and what was the total number of applications received during 1991-92, the percentage refused and reasons for refusal respectively.

Mr. Scott: At the end of March 1992 the independent living fund was paying 13,670 people. In addition, 1,132 people had ceased to receive payments during the year, giving a total of 14,802 people who received help from the fund during 1991-92.

The average weekly payment was £76 in April 1991 and rose to £95 at the end of March 1992.

The total number of applications received during 1991-92 was 16,677. Of these, 32·3 per cent.—5,385—were rejected, primarily because (a) the applicant had sufficient income to meet care costs; (b) the applicant had capital in excess of £8,000; (c) the applicant was not in receipt of higher rate attendance allowance; (d) the request was not one with which the fund could help.

Benefits (Young People)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what benefits are available to a young person without a permanent home who is not on a youth training scheme.

Mr. Burt: Such a person may be entitled to the same benefits as those listed in my reply to the hon. Member on 9 June at column 135, though housing benefit would depend upon the young person becoming liable to pay rent.

EC Proposals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the experts his Department consults on European Community proposals relating to social security matters.

Mr. Burt: We consult a wide range of experts in various fields, depending on the nature of individual proposals.

Consultations take place with employers' organisations, pension experts, voluntary organisations, medical experts, the Industrial Injuries Advisory Committee and other specialists as appropriate.

Pension Age

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on changes in pension age under consideration by the Government.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 8 June at column 53.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amount was recouped by the Compensation Recovery Unit in its first 19 months of operation; what this was as an annual rate; what was the estimate of the annual rate made by Touche Ross in its report to the DSS in 1987, adjusted for inflation; and what was the estimate of this figure made by the Government when the 1989 Bill was introduced, adjusted for inflation.

Miss Widdecombe: Between September 1990 and March 1992 the compensation recovery unit recouped over £29 million, rising to over £32 million by April 1992. Further rises are expected. In annual terms receipts were equivalent to about £15 million in the first 19 months, or over £25 million in 1991-92.

In introducing the new legislation the Government used the 1987 figures compiled by Touche Ross as a broad indication of the likely level of receipts. The consultants estimated that once all cases subject to the old arrangements had been settled and if a small payment limit —SPL—of £1,500 was set, the value of recoverable benefits under a new scheme would probably range up from about £37 million—about £51 million at March 1992 prices. This forecast was subsequently revised downwards when a higher SPL of £2,500 was introduced for the commencement of the scheme.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the running costs of the compensation recovery unit by the end of 1991; and what these costs were as a percentage of the receipts of that unit for the same period.

Mr. Burt: The administrative costs of the compensation recovery unit from its inception in early 1990 until the end of 1991 were £3·8 million including start-up costs, or about 19 per cent. of total receipts. During the financial year 1991-92 running costs were £2 million or about 8 per cent. of total receipts. This percentage is expected to fall further over the next few years as receipts rise much faster than running costs.

Income Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the weekly income of an unemployed person including child care benefit but excluding tax, in (a) 1979 and (b) 1992; and what this income would be if it had risen in line with (i) prices and (ii) earnings.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table. The assumptions used are the same as those in the published tax/benefit model tables. The family type illustrated is that of a married man with a non-working wife and two children aged four and six.

The figures given are for total net income, after housing costs, on supplementary benefit income support. This gives a full picture of the income for this family type, including child benefit and any entitlement to out-of-work income-related benefits.

	£ per week
Total net income 1979	37·15
Total net income 1992	108·58
1979 figure uprated to 1992 by prices	94·97
1979 figure uprated to 1992[1] by earnings	124·93

[1] In order to uprate for earnings, a whole economy, seasonally adjusted figure has been used. The latest available is March 1992.

Departmental Environment Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, Lord Henley, was appointed the Department's environmental Minister in September 1990.

The Department is committed to making the fullest possible contribution to achieving the aims of the environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance". This includes having in place by the end of 1992 a departmental "environmental housekeeping" strategy.

The strategy statement, currently in preparation, will set out the Department's policy for the use of its resources, designed to ensure that full account is taken of the needs of the environment.

The Department is participating in the Government's campaign to reduce their energy consumption by 15 per cent. over the five years 1991 to 1996. In doing so we will reduce the Department's CO_2 production from the 1990-91 calculated figure of 202,000 tonnes. A total of £600,000 has been made available for investing in energy efficiency measures during 1992-93. This will enable offices to introduce energy and water saving devices. We are currently preparing departmental publicity about the need to conserve water. An article covering environmental issues appeared in the February 1992 edition of the DSS quarterly journal.

We are committed to ensuring that our purchasing activities take environmental considerations fully into account. To this end we will promote the use of "environmentally friendly" materials, processes and products in the goods and services we purchase.

We will continue to encourage more economical and effective use of paper in the Department and the use of recycled paper products where practicable and cost effective.

It is the Department's policy to purchase only diesel vehicles and to fit remaining petrol vehicles with catalytic convertors.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support received reduced benefits in 1991 as a consequence of their receipt, or receipt by members of their family, of criminal injuries compensation.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. I understand that the information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

There is, however, a special rule in all the income-related benefits—income support, family credit, housing benefit, community charge benefit and disability working allowance—which provides that compensation payments arising from a personal or criminal injury which are placed on trust are disregarded indefinitely. In addition, payments can be made out of the trust in a wide range of circumstances without affecting the injured person's entitlement to benefit.

Keith Hamilton

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Benefits Agency will make a statement on the delays in Keith Hamilton's case, ref. PW 308877B.

Mr. Scott: Following the successful application for a review, full arrears of attendance allowance were sent on 3 June 1992. I understand that Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency wrote to the hon. Member on 11 June 1992 confirming this, explaining the reasons for and expressing his regret at the delays.

Legal Aid

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate has been made of the cost to the Benefits Agency arising from the implementation of paragraph 11 of the recent legal aid circular to justices' clerks.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that he is not yet in a position to provide an estimate. The matter is being discussed with the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Information Disclosure

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances the Benefits Agency will disclose information concerning an individual's benefit entitlement to a third party.

Mr. Burt: The information about individuals held in the Benefits Agency's records, including details of benefits paid, is treated as strictly confidential and is not normally released to a third party without the consent of the person concerned. Benefits Agency staff can disclose information to people representing the individual, for example solicitors or advice workers acting on a claimant's behalf.

The agency is bound by the Data Protection Act 1984, and holds its records in accordance with the principles set out in the Act. In accordance with this Act there are occasions when information may be disclosed without the permission of the individual concerned, for example:

(a) because the court has made an order;
(b) when it is in the public interest for the information to be disclosed, for example to the police to assist with the investigation of a serious crime;
(c) to social services or a welfare body because someone is at risk;
(d) to another Government Department or public body when this is necessary to safeguard public funds.

WALES

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has of the number of mortgage repossessions (a) in Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney and (b) in Wales since December 1991.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of possessions in the United Kingdom for the half year to June 1992 will be published by the Council of Mortgage Lenders during the summer. The data for the same period from the Lord Chancellor's Department, giving the number of orders made as a result of mortgage possession actions by courts in Wales, will also be available then.

For England and Wales as a whole, the council estimates that measures taken since December will save some 55,000 possessions this year: 40,000 as a result of new procedures for dealing with arrears cases; and 15,000 as a result of the direct payment to lenders of the mortgage interest element of income support.

Departmental Environment Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Hospital Beds

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospitals in Wales which had consultant obstetric or general practitioner maternity beds in 1990-91, and give the numbers of beds of each type in each hospital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is given in the table:

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, further to her answer of 21 May, Official Report, columns 249-50, she will provide a breakdown of employment by industry and ethnic origin for (a) men and (b) women broken down into (i) West Indian-Guyanese, (ii) Indian, (iii) Pakistani-Bangladeshi and (iv) all other origins.

Youth Training

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the allowances paid to people on youth training were last increased.

Mr. McLoughlin: The minimum youth training allowance for 16-year-olds was increased to £29·50 per week from 4 July 1988, and for those aged 17 and above has been £35·00 since 1 April 1986.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she has any plans to increase the level of allowance to those on YT.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no plans to increase the minimum levels of the YT allowance. Employers benefit considerably from their participation in YT, and are therefore strongly encouraged to supplement the minimum allowances.

Departmental Environment Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of her Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions her Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Employment Action

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been placed on employment action in Scotland in each of the months since the scheme started.

Mr. McLoughlin: The table shows the number of people in Scotland receiving employment action allowances as at each count date, plus the number starting to receive an allowance in the month ending at each count date since the programme started.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer of 2 June, Official Report, columns 469-70, if she will make a statement on the reasons for her Department's spending on advertising and promotion being expected to fall between 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 June 1992]: Advertising and publicity expenditure, subject to the Department's overall public expenditure survey settlement, is determined for each financial year on the basis of prevailing requirements to publicise the services and advice provided by the Department.

Expenditure for 1991-92 included two major advertising campaigns, (a) the training and enterprise council training campaign to publicise the role and existence of the new network of training and enterprise councils and (b) the "Just the Job" campaign to inform unemployed people about the range of help and advice available through the Employment Service. No major advertising campaigns are planned by the Department during 1992-93.

TRANSPORT

M65

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans the Government have to extend the M65 eastwards.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department has no such plans.

M3

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects that the M3 will be completed with the final section through Twyford Down.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Subject to the main contract starting this autumn, the final section of the M3 between Bar End, Winchester and Compton is planned to be completed by autumn 1994.

Public Transport (VAT)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the effect on total passenger miles travelled on public transport of the imposition of (a) a 5 per cent. and (b) a 17·5 per cent. VAT rate on public transport fares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have made no detailed assessment of the effects of the imposition of value added tax on public transport passenger mileage. Agreement reached by Finance Ministers enables us to maintain our existing zero rates.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend expects shortly to complete his consideration of the proposals before him and the programme will then be announced.

Motor Cycles

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to introduce stage 2 noise limits on motor cycles under the relevant EEC directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes. It is the policy of the Government that motor-cycle manufacturers should keep up with the rest of the motor industry by designing vehicles that use the most modern technology to reduce noise at source.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to stop the sale of motor cycle exhaust systems which are labelled not for road use.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Regulation 57(4) of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 already provides that a motor cycle shall not be used on a road if it is fitted with an exhaust system marked with the words "not for road use" or words to the like effect. Section 76(3) of the Road Traffic Act 1988 makes it an offence to sell or supply an exhaust system which contravenes this regulation, the maximum penalty for which is £1,000. The Government have no plans to extend the on-road prohibition to off-road use where it would adversely affect machines used in competition.

EC Proposals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the experts his Department consults on European Community proposals relating to transport matters.

Mr. Norris: The Department does not have a fixed list of experts which it consults on European Community proposals. Experts are consulted as and when necessary: the total number is large, and a list could not be assembled except at disproportionate cost.

Roads, London

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each scheme in his Department's current programme, together with the cost at current prices, for (a) junction improvements in the Greater London area, (b) other road improvements in the Greater London area and (c) new roads in the Greater London area.

Mr. Norris: The trunk road major improvement programme for London is as follows:

[1] Works and land but excluding VAT.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money was spent in each year since 1979 on (a) new road building and (b) road improvements in the Greater London area; and what is the planned expenditure for the next five years.

Mr. Norris: Spend on major trunk road schemes, excluding land, in London from 1982-83 onwards is given in the table.

Year	£ million
1982-83	30·4
1983-84	20·7
1984-85	19·7
1985-86	54·3
1986-87	85·1
1987-88	88·0
1988-89	61·7
1989-90	118·9
1990-91	138·9
1991-92	134·1
1992-93	123·3

To provide earlier figures or the breakdown requested between new construction and improvements would involve disproportionate costs. The forecast expenditure for the current year is £123·3 million. Decisions about expenditure in the future have still to be taken.

Departmental Environment Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of Sate for Transport who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications for all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government are again appointing a Minister within each Department to take particular responsibility for environmental aspects of that Department's policies and programmes. A list of nominated Ministers will be announced shortly. I shall be the nominated Minister for my Department.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assistance his Department has provided to British Nuclear Fuels in its development of transport flasks for the air carriage of plutonium.

Mr. Norris: None. The development of such flasks is the responsibility of British Nuclear Fuels. The Department's function is to assess the designs against the provisions of the International Atomic Energy Agency's regulations for the safe transport of radioactive material.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Commission

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce the membership of the commission to be established to deal with local government re-organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I am inviting the following people to serve as members of the Local Government Commission under the chairmanship of Sir John Banham:

David Ansbro
Professor Michael Chisholm
Ken Ennals
Brian Hill
Councillor Mary Leigh
Ann Levick
Robert Scruton
Clive Wilkinson
Baroness Wilcox

This is a strong, independent commission with a balanced membership covering a wide range of interests and experience. We intend to announce further members of the commission very shortly.

Endangered Species

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts have been made by his Department to encourage greater adherence to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species by other countries.

Mr. Maclean: The convention's secretariat bears the primary responsibility for ensuring that the requirements of the convention are met. Within the European Community, the European Commission is responsible for ensuring adherence to the EC regulation which implements the convention. We draw evidence of any apparent problems to the attention of the country concerned and either the secretariat or commission as appropriate. We introduce any trade restrictions which the secretariat recommends to encourage compliance.

We are also very active in promoting improvements in the quality of implementation. We asked the European Commission last October to propose substantially stricter controls within the Community and this they have done. Further, with our EC partners, we have taken 1,400 decisions since 1984 to suspend trade in particular species from particular countries because we were not satisfied with their assessments of its impact. At the conference of the parties to the convention in March, we pressed successfully for similar action to be taken world wide. Further, we played a leading part at the conference in introducing measures to ensure compliance with the convention's transport requirement by providing for suspensions of trade in birds suffering high mortality in transit.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage the special protection of endangered species travelling on migration routes which are not included in officially designated protected areas.

Mr. Maclean: The Government already support the protection of endangered migratory species, both nationally and internationally. The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 gives strict protection to endangered migratory birds and mammals in Great Britain. The United Kingdom has participated actively since 1985 as a party to the international convention on the conservation of migratory species of wild animals, known as the Bonn convention. At present the United Kingdom holds the chairmanship of the standing committee of the convention.

In addition, the United Kingdom sponsored negotiations under the Bonn convention of an agreement on the conservation of bats in Europe. The agreement was concluded during the third conference of the parties to the convention in Geneva in September 1991. The United Kingdom signed the bats agreement when it was opened for signature in London on 4 December 1991 and my Department is providing its secretariat.

The United Kingdom delegation played a leading role in the conclusion at the same conference of an agreement on the conservation of small cetaceans of the Baltic and North seas. The agreement was signed by the United Kingdom on 16 April this year and my Department is financing its interim secretariat, based at the sea mammals research unit in Cambridge.

The EC birds directive makes specific provision for the protection of migratory birds and their feeding grounds and the Government are implementing this by the designation of special protection areas (SPAs), now 52 in number, and through the indentification of potential SPAs, both of which receive protection under the planning system.

Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by his Department in implementing (a) the polluter pays principle and (b) the user pays principle.

Mr. Maclean: The polluter pays principle is at the centre of the Government's approach to environmental policy. If the polluter pays the cost of meeting environmental controls, the user will also pay through the resulting increase in prices and charges.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many public inquiries, both public and with written representations, were held during the past year to the nearest convenient date and for each of the previous 10 years respectively.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the chief executive and I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend.

EC Proposals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the experts his Department consults on European Community proposals relating to environmental matters.

Mr. Maclean: My Department consults as widely as necessary to ensure that European Community proposals are given full consideration.

Departmental Environment Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Government are again appointing a Minister within each Government Department to take particular responsibility for environmental aspects of that Department's policies and programmes. The list will be announced shortly.

Mineral Planning

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend mineral planning guidance note 3.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 22 May 1992 to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, North (Ms. Walley), Official Report, column 269.

Orimulsion

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to discourage the use of orimulsion for the purposes of steam-raising in Britain and the rest of the EC.

Mr. Maclean: Any proposed use of orimulsion is likely to arise within processes subject to integrated pollution control by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Such processes cannot be carried out without an authorisation. Authorisations must include conditions to ensure that the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost will be used to prevent or minimise the release of prescribed substances and for rendering any such releases harmless. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans for other action in relation orimulsion.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what levels or proportion of (a) sulphur and (b) other toxic or harmful substances are estimated to be released as a result of the combustion of orimulsion for the purposes of electricity generation according to the current proposals for its use.

Mr. Maclean: Although the burning of orimulsion produces significantly more sulphur dioxide and particulate matter than does, for example, that of heavy fuel oil, the quantities of pollutants ultimately released to the environment depend not only on the type of fuel used, but on the abatement techniques used to control releases.

The operation of combustion processes in which orimulsion is burnt require authorisation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. In granting an authorisation, HMIP requires the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost (BATNEEC) to be used by the operator to prevent or reduce emissions from the process.

Guidance on what constitutes BATNEEC together with the levels of releases achievable are set out in the chief inspector's guidance note to inspectors "Combustion Processes, Large Boilers and Furnaces 59MW(th) and Over", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Details of applications for, and any subsequent authorisations granted for all processes controlled by HMIP, are placed on the public registers held at HMIP regional offices which may be inspected by anyone, free of charge.

Waste Management

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to decide on certificates of technical competence for the Waste Management Industry Training and Advisory Board; what representations he has received on the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The proposal for certificates of technical competence for waste managers forms part of the new waste management licensing system under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Powers exist in section 74 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 for the Secretary of State to prescribe the qualifications and experience required of a person for the purposes of deciding whether the management of a waste site is to be in the hands of a technically competent person. As the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Blatch, announced in another place on 10 October 1990—Official Report, columns 289-90—the Department of the Environment commissioned the Waste Management Industry Training and Advisory Board (WAMITAB) to prepare a system of waste management qualifications that might be so prescribed. WAMITAB delivered its report on these proposals in April this year.

The only representations made to my Department about the WAMITAB proposals since they were submitted have come from WAMITAB itself. The proposals are being examined and will be further discussed with WAMITAB. When Ministers have reached a view on the suitability of WAMITAB's proposals, this will be announced and will form part of a wider public consultation on waste management licensing later this summer. Final decisions on certificates of technical competence will then be made, in the light of that public consultation, so that regulations giving effect to the decisions may be laid before Parliament. Subject to the emerging timetable for the proposed environment agency, it is intended to bring these regulations into force in April 1993.

Earth Summit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, East of 5 June, Official Report, column 665, if he will set out (a) the number of officials from each Government Department in attendance at the Earth summit, (b) the representation from the British diplomatic posts in Brazil and the Forestry Commission respectively, (c) the names of individuals and organisations holding observer status with the United Kingdom delegation and (d) the cost of supporting the United Kingdom delegation to the Rio conference and related events in Brazil.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom delegation consisted of the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for the Environment, the Minister for Overseas Development, myself and 24 officials from the Department of the Environment, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Overseas Development Administration and the Department of Trade and Industry. In addition, there were five representatives from our diplomatic posts in Brazil and one official from the Forestry Commission.

Eight junior support staff also attended the conference. The staff involved were needed to service not only the plenary sessions of the conference but the specialised sectoral working groups that were set up and where much of the detailed negotiating was done. Other staff were required to provide office support facilities and to liaise with the local authorities over such matters as transport and security.

The 13 observers attached to the United Kingdom delegation were:

Ann Clwyd – Opposition overseas aid spokesperson
Richard Sandbrook – International Institute on Environment and Development
Barry Coates – World Wide Fund for Nature
Vicky Johnson – Action Aid
Patricia Feeney – Oxfam } Shared one place.
Joan Davidson – Oxfam }
Sir John Chatfield – Association of County Councils
John Harman – Association of Metropolitan Authorities
Rod Aspinwall – Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment
Peter Bright – International Chamber of Commerce UK
David Lea – Trade Union Congress
Clare Ramsaran – United Nations Conference on Environment and Development for Youth
Professor Iain Thornton – Imperial college
Julie Hill – Green Alliance } Shared one place.
Graham Wynne – Royal Society for the Protection of Birds }

The estimated cost of the delgation's travel and subsistence, including hotel costs will be about £190,000. Non-governmental organisations were responsible for their own travel and accommodation expenses.

The estimated total administrative cost of the conference, including office facilities, transport and communications will be about £500,000.

Nitrogen Dioxide

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 189, what steps are being taken by his Department to implement the recommendations of the report by Warren Spring Laboratory on nitrogen dioxide levels in the United Kingdom, and specifically the recommendations for more detailed monitoring using diffusion tubes and chemiluminescent monitors in London where the heaviest concentrations of nitrogen dioxide were found.

Mr. Maclean: My Department will be arranging, through Warren Spring Laboratory and with the help of the local authorities concerned, to continue national nitrogen dioxide monitoring with diffusion tubes on a permanent basis, and to enhance the level of detail in London and some other urban areas.

Chemiluminescent monitoring is a much more expensive technique and is therefore less well suited to examining the patterns of nitrogen dioxide distribution within cities. Some expansion of nitrogen dioxide monitoring using this technique is none-the-less already planned and will be taken forward with the benefit of advice from the air quality of urban air review group, taking account of the report's recommendations.

Coastal Zone

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is currently being undertaken by his Department in preparation for forthcoming EC legislation on coastal zone planning.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The Environment Committee of the House of Commons for the Session 1991-92 has issued a report on coastal zone protection and planning. This includes recommendations for United Kingdom involvement in development of EC coastal policies. The Government will respond to that report in due course.

Territorial Waters (Planning)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment is he will make it his policy to extend planning controls to the 12-nautical mile limit of territorial waters around the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The Environment Select Committee made several recommendations in their second report of last Session on the issue of extending harmonisation landward planning control and seaward regulations as far as the 12-nautical mile limit of territorial waters. We are considering the report and will respond in due course.

Coastal Zone

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to consolidate legislation relating to activities in the coastal zone.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The Environment Committee of the House of Commons for the Session 1991-92 has issued a report on coastal zone protection and planning. This included recommendations for the consolidation of legislation relating to activities in the coastal zone. The Government will respond to that report in due course.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in his Department are members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 May 1992]: At 1 April 1992 the total number of staff employed in the Scottish Office and associated Departments who have described themselves as belonging to an ethnic minority was 27, or 0·4 per cent. Of that number, one grade 7 is so described, or 0·2 per cent.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 May 1992]: My Department does not conduct recruitment for top grades.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 May 1992]: My Department conducted a voluntary survey of the ethnic origins of staff in 1987, a reminder exercise in 1989, and thereafter all new entrants have been invited to complete questionnaires. I have no plan to conduct a further survey.

We achieved an 87 per cent. response rate from the exercise, and 0·4 per cent. of staff have described themselves as belonging to an ethnic minority. The economically active ethnic minority population in the Lothian area is 0·6 per cent.

HEALTH

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by regional health authority for each year for the last five years, and for this year to date, the number of new cases diagnosed of patients suffering from cancer of the rectum and colon; and if she will show in her answer the number who have since died from the complaint.

Counterfeit Medicines

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to stop the import of counterfeit medicines; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Any reports of alleged import of counterfeit medicines into the United Kingdom are urgently investigated by the enforcement unit of the Medicines Control Agency. The United Kingdom licensing system covering the import, sale and production, of medicinal products is continually kept under review to ensure appropriate safeguards against counterfeit products are maintained.

Medical Treatment

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific steps she proposes to take to ensure that the internal market for medical treatment within the national health service does not prejudice (a) the resources currently available for observation, research or innovation within some larger and longer-founded institutions and (b) the level of reserves of nursing and ancilliary services available for emergencies and relapses of patients during post-operative recuperation.

Mr. Sackville: The introduction of a new national health service research and development (R and D) strategy marks our commitment to increasing the resources devoted to R and D for the national health service. Although staffing levels are primarily decisions for local management, the national health service reforms provide an effective mechanism for targeting resources where they are most responsive to patients' needs, including post-operative recuperation.

Surgery

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the average weekly number of theatre sessions for each regional health authority for each year since 1985 and for the current year to date.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is given in the table. Information about operating theatre usage has been collected centrally only since 1987. Figures for the year ending March 1992 are not yet available centrally.

Continuing Care Beds

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department issues to health authorities regarding the discharge of patients from continuing care beds to private residential or nursing homes.

Mr. Yeo: Guidance "Discharge of patients from hospital—HC(89)5", on discharge procedures was issued to health authorities in February 1989. A copy is available in the Library.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, by health authority area, the numbers of continuing care beds available in hospitals, for occupation by elderly people; and what is the average length of stay in such beds.

Mr. Yeo: The table shows, for each health authority, the number of beds in wards designated for elderly patients. Continuing care beds are not separately identified. The average length of stay in these beds is 36·2 days.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the number of practice managers of health centres who are employed on Whitley council salary grade 4 or less in (a) the Northern regional health authority, (b) Sunderland district health authority and (c) England and Wales;

(2) if she will list the number of single-handed general practitioner practices which employ (a) 0 to two staff (full-time equivalent), (b) three to five staff (full-time equivalent), (c) five to 10 staff (full-time equivalent) and (d) more than 10 staff (full-time equivalent) in (i) the Northern regional health authority, (ii) Sunderland district health authority and (iii) England and Wales.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Single Practices

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the number of single-handed practices which have patient lists of (a) 1,000 or less, (b) 2,000 and (c) 3,000 or more in (i) the Northern regional health authority, (ii) Sunderland district health authority and (iii) England and Wales;

(2) if she will list the number of single general practitioner practices in the (a) Northern regional health authority, (b) Sunderland district health authority and (c) England and Wales.

Dr. Mawhinney: The latest available information for 1 October 1991 is shown in the table. Information on general medical practitioners is collected by family health services authority area. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Abortion

141. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement on the methods of disposal now being used at private abortion centres; if any recognised abortion centre is still using a macerator; whether she will establish an independent monitoring team to investigate private centres; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will make a statement on the way in which the remains of aborted unborn children are disposed of.

Mr. Sackville: Guidelines have been issued to the NHS and the private abortion sector making it clear that, subject to personal wishes, fetuses and fetal tissue from termination of pregnancy must be incinerated. This is the method now being used by all places approved under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967. Compliance in the NHS is a matter for individual health authorities. The Department's medical, nursing and investigative officers make regular unannounced inspections of approved places and I see no need to change that arrangement.

147. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many unborn children were aborted, during the last 12 months for which figures are available, at (a) 10 to 12 weeks, (b) 12 to 14 weeks, (c) 14 to 16 weeks, (d) 16 to 18 weeks, (e) 18 to 20 weeks, (f) 20 to 22 weeks and (g) 22 to 24 weeks gestation.

Mr. Sackville: The figures requested are not readily available in the form requested. The table shows the information that is readily available for England, Wales and Scotland:

Number of abortions by gestation weeks, England, Wales and Scotland. (1 October 1990—30 September 1991)

Gestation weeks	Number of abortions
9-12	97,098
13-14	10,577
15-16	6,292
17-18	4,207
19-20	2,803
21-22	1,625
23-24	709

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many unborn children with mental or physical handicaps were aborted after 24 weeks' gestation.

Mr. Sackville: Between 1 April and 30 September 1991, 31 abortions were performed in England, Wales and Scotland after 24 weeks' gestation under statutory ground E which states:

"there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped".

These are the most recent figures available since the changes to the Abortion Act 1967, as amended by section 37 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990, came into effect on 1 April 1991.

Hospital Doctors' Working Hours

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out her plans for the reduction of junior hospital doctors' hours.

Dr. Mawhinney: The "New Deal" for junior doctors, launched in June 1991, set a time scale for reducing the hours of duty of doctors and dentists in training. Under the "new deal", average weekly contracted hours of duty are to be reduced initially to 83 per week for those working on-call rotas, 72 per week for those working partial shifts and 60 per week for those working full shifts. This was to be done as soon as practicable but, in the light of progress to date, we announced in May that we had set a target date of 1 April 1993 for achieving this.

Average weekly contracted hours of duty are to be reduced further to a maximum of 72 per week for those in hard-pressed on-call posts, 64 per week for those working partial shifts and 56 per week for those working full shifts by 31 December 1994. Regardless of contracted hours, our intention is that no junior doctor employed on a full-time basis should normally be expected to work for more than an average of 56 hours per week by that date.

Subject to review by the ministerial group on junior doctors' hours, the aim is to reduce maximum average contracted hours of duty for on-call posts which are considered not to be hard pressed to 72 per week by the end of 1996. Doctors in higher professional training may still contract for up to 83 hours per week after that date where it would be to the benefit of their training and they wish to do so, providing proper support staffing exists and the duties are not harmful either to the trainees or to patients.

Leeds General Infirmary

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what examination her Department has made of the compliance of the consultancy with the firm Madgenix formerly held by Dr. Ian Barnes at the Leeds general infirmary department of chemical pathology, with her Department's circular HM/62/21; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Allegations concerning this consultancy were the subject of an investigation by the internal auditors of Leeds Western health authority in 1989. An independent consultancy conducted the internal audit. The allegations were not substantiated.

Recent restatements of the allegations by the Management Science and Finance Union have now been referred to the internal auditors by the board of the United Leeds teaching hospitals NHS trust.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action her Department has taken since the statutory auditor's report on the department on chemical pathology at Leeds general infirmary in 1987; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department sought an assurance from Yorkshire regional health authority that the matters contained in the 1987 statutory auditor's report were being addressed. The region reported to the Department in December 1989 that following an internal review, the then Leeds Western health authority had introduced revised procedures for the management of pathology services. The region was satisfied with the district's response to the audit criticisms.

EC Proposals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the experts her Department consults on European Community proposals relating to health matters.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department consults public sector bodies, professional associations, voluntary organisations and other bodies on EC proposals relating to health matters depending upon the contents of the proposal.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the number of egg-associated food poisoning outbreaks during 1991, listing all the local authorities who have reported such outbreaks to the communicable disease surveillance centre; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The bulk of egg-associated food poisoning outbreaks reported are caused by salmonellas. Outbreaks of human salmonellosis reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service's (PHLS) communicable disease surveillance centre, together with information on suspect foods, are routinely published in the PHLS-SVS update on salmonella infection. The total number of outbreaks reported in 1991 was 57. Reports of outbreaks are voluntary and are made in confidence to the PHLS. Publication of reports broken down by local authority could damage the continued co-operation of local investigators in providing information relating to outbreaks, which is important for national infectious disease control.

The table gives the information by regional health authority.

1. Data provided by the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre.
2. An outbreak represents two or more related laboratory confirmed salmonella infections in humans of whom at least one was ill.
3. Suspect foods are those reported to communicable disease surveillance centre as such.
4. The total of 57 reports in 1991 includes five not reported in time for inclusion in the January 1992 PHLS-SVS update.

Departmental Environment Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of her Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions her Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment gave him today.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) why screening for human T-cell leukaemia in the blood transfusion service has not been introduced;

(2) if she will publish the conclusions of the study into the risks of the human T-cell leukaemia virus undertaken at the north London blood transfusion centre on behalf of her Department.

Mr. Sackville: The survey by the north London blood transfusion centre into the prevalence of HTLV in its blood donors has recently been concluded and the findings have been presented at a scientific meeting. The results are being considered by an expert advisory committee and recommendations are expected to be presented to Ministers shortly.

General Practitioners

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she has given regarding (a) the ownership of private medical companies by general practitioner fund holders and (b) the referral of patients for treatment by such companies by fund holders involved in the companies.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regulation 3(2) of the National Health Service (Fund-holding Practices) (General) Regulations 1991 requires GP fund holders to obtain the written consent of the regional health authority before they are able to use the practice fund to purchase any services from a body with which they have a particular connection. This would include a contract placed with any medical companies in which any member of the fund holding practice had a financial interest, for example, as director or employee. These regulations were issued to all GP fund holders.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department gives to health authorities concerning expenditure by health authorities on newspaper advertisements issued in connection with an authority's proposal to apply for trust status.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. Trust applications are subject to public consultation by regional health authorities, and it is for regions, in consultation with individual trust applicants to decide how best to conduct the consultation and bring it to public notice.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy towards applications for trust status where a hospital trust business plan has as its long-term objective the closure of the hospital concerned.

Dr. Mawhinney: To be successful, each trust must provide the range, volume and quality of services required by its purchasers.

Each trust application is judged against four key criteria: the benefits to patients and improvements in the quality of services it will achieve; leadership and management; the involvement in management of key professional staff; and, financial viability.

Opencast Mining

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will undertake an investigation into the level of respiratory problems of the people in the village of Kirkhamgate, west Yorkshire, brought about in the area by opencast operations;

(2) how many children and adults in the village of Kirkhamgate, west Yorkshire are suffering respiratory problems following the opencast coal mining operations in the area; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Information concerning people with respiratory problems in Kirkhamgate are not collected centrally. The district health authority is not aware of any respiratory problems associated with the small opencast mine nearby.

It is not clear what role current levels of air pollutants may play in the occurrence of respiratory complaints. I am advised, however, that there is no evidence to suggest that surface mineral working causes any detrimental health effects on local communities. Further research needs in the general area of the effects of air pollutants upon health is being considered by the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants which was set up by the Department this year.

Maternity Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department ceased to collect centrally information on the place of birth of babies born to women resident in Dacorum and St. Albans districts broken down by hospital in the form indicated in her answer of 15 October 1990, Official Report, columns 656-57.

Mr. Sackville: I regret that the answer given to the hon. Member on 13 January, at column 522, was incorrect. The information requested in that question is as follows:

	Dacorum	St. Albans
St. Albans City Hospital	1,159	1,282
Luton and Dunstable Hospital	21	49
Queen Elizabeth II Hospital, Welwyn Garden City	5	156
Watford General Hospital	210	58
Royal Buckinghamshire Hospital	180	0
RAF Halton Maternity Unit	191	0
Other hospitals	73	60

Elsewhere	1	1
Total	1,883	1,623

South Birmingham Health Authority

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the KPMG Peat Marwick report into South Birmingham health authority will be available.

Mr. Sackville: We expect the report to be submitted to the regional health authority shortly.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mink

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Department gives to establishments, licensed under the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987, on the avoidance of spread of diseases of mink between establishments and to other wild species.

Mr. Soames: Licensed mink-keeping establishments are visited periodically by the state veterinary service. These visits are primarily concerned with welfare matters, but, when necessary advice is provided on disease.

Sheep Dip

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the scientific advisers to the Veterinary Products Committee who advised on organophosphorous sheep dips, and their employers; what evidence they gave; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: In order to ensure an independent assessment of the dossiers supporting applications, the Veterinary Products Committee supplements its own expertise with advice from officials in the veterinary medicines directorate, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of Health, the Health and Safety Executive and the Department of the Environment. In respect of organophosphorous sheep dips, that advice has also included: an analysis of reports made under the suspected adverse reaction surveillance scheme; the results of an Health and Safety Executive survey of sheep dipping practice in the farming community; and the report of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides into diazinon's use as a pesticide. The committee has recently asked companies to supply further data by the end of the year on studies of farm operators, including blood tests and details of protective clothing worn, as well as studies to show which areas of the bodies of operators are most exposed.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been done into the efficacy of different methods for eliminating sheep scab; what are the numbers of infected animals reported in the last five years for which statistics are available; and what comparable eradication schemes operate in other EC countries.

Mr. Gummer: Research is being carried out at the Central Veterinary Laboratory into methods of sheep scab control other than dipping.

Information on the number of infected animals is not available because—as long as the disease remains notifiable—infestation is recorded on a flock basis. In Great Britain, the number of outbreaks of sheep scab by flock in the past five years are as follows:

Year	Number
1988	36
1989	66
1990	95
1991	116
1992	[1]93

[1] to 31 May

The Department does not maintain comprehensive information on the control policies in other Community member states. There is no Community requirement for action to control scab.

Nutrition Systems

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much funding is currently allocated by his Department to the encouragement of (a) an integrated plant nutrition system, (b) the raised efficiency of synthetic fertiliser use and (c) the promotion of effective low input systems.

Mr. Curry: In 1992-93, the Department will be spending about £7 million on (a) and (b) and £6 million on (c). Some £14·8 million will also be spent on the reduction of pesticide usage, which has a major underpinning role in the development of low input systems. The LINK programme "Technologies for Sustainable Farming Systems", introduced in July 1991, is designed to promote collaborative research in the areas mentioned, and total financial support for that programme will exceed £4 million, of which half will be contributed by the Government.

Animal Slaughtering

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to bring forward legislation which will prohibit the export of live animals for slaughter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: There are no plans to introduce such legislation. New Community rules will come into force on 1 January 1993 to safeguard the welfare of animals during transport. These rules will apply equally to transport within and between member states.

Tobacco

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the present subsidy for tobacco farmers from the common agricultural policy; what proportion of the CAP is allocated to support to tobacco farmers; and what proportion of the subsidised tobacco is exported to third world countries.

Mr. Curry: In 1991, the EC spent 1,300 mecu—about £927 million—on the CAP tobacco regime, which is about 3·9 per cent. of total CAP expenditure. About 18 per cent. of EC raw tobacco production goes to developing countries.

Chernobyl

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the number of farms and (b) their acreage that remain under restriction orders in the United Kingdom as a result of the radioactive contamination from the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is as follows:

	Number of farms	Acreage (approximate)
England	138	95,500
Northern Ireland	110	19,850
Scotland	60	145,420
Wales	407	205,500

Conservation Projects

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with representatives of the agricultural industry with regard to future assistance for conservation projects undertaken by farmers.

Mr. Soames: My ministerial colleagues and I have frequent meetings with representatives of the industry about a wide range of issues, including future assistance for conservation projects underaken by farmers.

EC Proposals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the experts his Department consults on European Community proposals relating to agricultural matters.

Mr. Curry: My Department consults a very wide range of organisations on European Community proposals.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tests he has carried out on milk for the presence of the organism causing BSE in the last three years; what was the outcome of the tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Milk has never been shown to transmit any of the spongiform encephalopathies or to contain the infective agent.

Nevertheless, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food funded work starting in 1988 at the Royal Veterinary College, London to determine whether infectivity exists in milk, mammary gland—udder—or supramammary lymph node of four cows with confirmed BSE. No infectivity was found.

A second experiment has been initiated in which susceptible mice will be fed milk from six confirmed cases of BSE—two each at early, mid and late lactation. The results will be published in the normal way when the experiment is complete.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Ministry's progress in developing a blood test for BSE; and when he expects that such a test might be available for use.

Mr. Gummer: Studies are still under way to develop a satisfactory diagnostic test to detect the BSE agent in the live animal. It is not possible to forecast when such a test might be available, or even to be sure that a blood test will necessarily be the best method of detection. The hon. Member can rest assured that I shall announce any change in the position without delay.

Flood Risks

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what study his Department has made of the flood risks posed by sea level rises in the future to (a) the nuclear power station sites in Suffolk and (b) the former toxic waste tip near Pakerfield, Suffolk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change has produced estimates of possible sea level rise on a global basis, amounting to about 20 cm by the year 2030 and 65 cm by 2100, but it is not yet possible to assess with precision likely sea level rise in particular localities. Based on this and other information, the Department has issued guidance to the National Rivers Authority and maritime district councils about allowances to be made for sea level rise and crustal movement in designing coastal defences. For the Anglian region, the recommended allowance is 6 mm a year. Although no specific studies have been made of the sites referred to by the hon. Member, it is not thought that either site will be affected by sea level rise.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

State Veterinary Service

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of state veterinary service staff in each year since 1985.

Mr. Soames: Since 1985, the structure of the state veterinary service has changed several times. For example, the Central Veterinary Laboratory, which formed part of the state veterinary service attained agency status in April 1990. In order to allow direct comparisons, the figures provided relate to veterinary, technical and scientific staff in headquarters, the field and investigation services only.

As at 1 January 1985—Figures not readily available.
As at 1 January 1986—Total 768
As at 1 January 1987—Total 689
As at 1 January 1988—Total 711·5
As at 1 January 1989—Total 707·5
As at 1 January 1990—Total 767
As at 1 January 1991—Total 800·5
As at 1 January 1992—Total 798

Shellfish Farming

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sum of money has been made available by his Department to meet costs of hygiene testing at or near shellfish farming sites in pursuance of EC directive 492.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

The Department has made funds available in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to assist with the initial classification of shellfish harvesting areas in England and Wales required by this directive.

Funds have been allocated to the Public Health Laboratory Service to enable additional microbiological examinations of shellfish to be made without charge to local authorities. The Department has also offered assistance, to local authorities that request it, with the costs of collection of shellfish samples, contributing to such costs as boat hire and transport of samples. Local authorities are expected to meet their own manpower costs.

In the last two financial quarters—January to June 1992—total funding under these two schemes has amounted to £222,500. The Department will shortly be inviting bids from local authorities for the next quarter.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current position on the United Kingdom nuclear weapons at sea policy.

Mr. Rifkind: The North Atlantic Treaty Organisation confirmed last autumn that the sub-strategic nuclear capability remains essential to provide the link between conventional and strategic forces, but that significant reductions in sub-strategic nuclear forces were now possible. In addition to the reductions announced last autumn, the alliance has decided to terminate the deployment of US nuclear depth bombs on NATO maritime patrol aircraft.

The Government are committed to maintaining the United Kindom's nuclear arsenal at the minimum level necessary for our deterrent needs. My predecessor announced last Septemberr that tactical nuclear weapons would no longer be deployed on Royal Navy ships in normal circumstances. The Government have now decided that this residual capability is no longer needed. Royal Navy ships and aircraft and Royal Air Force maritime patrol aircraft will therefore no longer have the capability to deploy tactical nuclear weapons. The United Kingdom weapons previously earmarked for this role will be destroyed. The United Kingdom's sub-strategic nuclear capability will therefore consist of Royal Air Force dual-capable aircraft with the WE177 free-fall bomb.

Research Establishment, Dundrennan

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what complaints he has received about misuse of public property and personnel at the royal armament research development establishment, Dundrennan; what action he has taken; what has been the outcome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: A number of allegations were made in August last year by a Transport and General Workers Union representative concerning misuse of official property and labour at the Kirkcudbright range. The allegations were investigated by the Ministry of Defence police who concluded that there were no grounds for proceeding with criminal charges against the individuals concerned. It was evident, however, that there were a number of management deficiencies that should be rectified. Action has been taken to ensure that such deficiencies will not recur.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent staff changes there have been at the royal armament research development establishment, Dundrennan; what has been the reason for the change in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Since 1 April 1992 two MoD industrial grade staff have retired on medical grounds. As part of the current MoD staff reduction exercise these staff were not replaced. Changes in the contractors' staff are a matter for the contractor.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the ownership, management and staffing arrangements at the royal armament research development establishment at Dundrennan.

Mr. Aitken: The royal armament research development establishment at Dundrennan was transferred from the Defence Research Agency on 1 April 1992 to the directorate general of test and evaluation as part of the directorate of research facilities and ranges. It is therefore now an MOD establishment. The facility employs contractors for much of the work and the staff is therefore made up of both MoD and contractors' staff.

RAF Review

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of the personnel who have prepared options for the review of the structure of RAF MOD establishments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to name officials in these circumstances. The options reflect wide consultation throughout the Air Force, the Office of Management and Budget, civilian personnel management and the Defence Works Services Organisation. The consultative document published on 4 June indicates the officials to whom comments and observations are to be directed.

Political Literature

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how literature from the political parties promoting candidates at a general election is made available to serving members of the armed forces; whether canvassing on military installations is encouraged together with the distribution of unsolicited leaflets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Queen's regulations prohibit the distribution of literature about the programmes or policies of political parties through service channels. Where there is normal access direct from the public highway canvassers may visit married quarters and families' hostels. Where access is by service roads and there is no separate entrance, access to accommodation will be at the discretion of the commanding officer.

Defence Exhibition, Chile

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what help was given by the United Kingdom armed forces to British companies taking part in FIDAE 92 aerospace and defence exhibition in Chile in March.

Mr. Aitken: At the invitation of the Chilean air force, eight RAF aircraft were present at FIDAE 92. The RAF also co-hosted a reception.

Military Equipment (Promotion)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and places to be visited by HMS Invincible and the other Royal Navy ships taking part in the promotional tour for British military equipment; what the cost of the tour is; and whether all costs are being paid by his Department.

Mr. Aitken: HMS Invincible, escorted by HMS Newcastle, HMS Norfolk, HMS Boxer and two Royal Fleet Auxiliaries, is currently undertaking a six-month operational deployment to the far east, known as Orient '92. Although appropriate opportunities will be taken to help promote British defence exports, this is not the primary purpose of the deployment. Orient '92 is intended to demonstrate the continuing ability of the Royal Navy to operate in strength outside the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation area. It will provide the Royal Navy with valuable opportunities to practice operating as a task group in relatively unfamiliar environments, and to take part in bilateral and multilateral exercises with friendly navies. Ships from the task group have already visited Greece and Egypt. Further planned visits are as follows:

	Month
Kenya	June
Seychelles	June
Mauritius	June
Diego Garcia	June, October
Singapore	July, August, September
Malaysia	July, August, September
Hong Kong	July, August, September
Republic of Korea	July, August
Japan	July, August
Indonesia	July, September
Brunei	August
Thailand	September
Philippines	September
Australia	September, October
Oman	October
Bahrain	October
United Arab Emirates	October
Qatar	October
Egypt	November

The ships would, of course, have undertaken other tasks had they not been participating in Orient '92. It is therefore difficult to disaggregate the additional costs of the deployment. However, we expect them to be in the order of £4 million. All of these costs are being met by my Department.

Operation Gladio

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the public disclosure of information on the activities of and United Kingdom support for Operation Gladio since its inception.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to comment on matters of this nature. This remains the policy.

Departmental Environment Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: In accordance with the Government's policy set out in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200), my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence is the nominated Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of the Department's policies and programmes. My noble Friend assumed this responsibility in April.

Since the appointment of a nominated Minister responsible for environmental matters in September 1990, a network of environment committees has been established within my Department and the three services. The senior committee is the defence environment committee chaired by my noble Friend. The MOD environment manual, which gives practical advice on a wide range of environmental issues, was published in 1991 and has been distributed throughout my Department. At present, the MOD is carrying out a comprehensive environmental review of its activities in order to assess its performance on environmental matters. Further information and details of specific initiatives are contained in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991 (Vol. 1, Ch. 5).

Hospitals

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by county and region his Department's hospitals in the United Kingdom which had consultant obstetric or general practitioner maternity beds in 1990-91, and give the number of beds of each type in each hospital.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is as follows:

Service hospital	County	Regional Health Authority	Number of beds[1]
Cambridge military hospital, Aldershot	Hampshire	South West	58
Princess of Wales[2]	Cambridgeshire	East Anglia	[3]22
RAF hospital, Ely			[4]7
Princess Alexandra RAF hospital, Wroughton	Wiltshire	Wessex	16
Princess Mary's RAF hospital, Halton	Buckinghamshire	Oxford	10

[1] Only obstetric maternity beds are to be found in service hospitals.
[2] Obstetric unit closed in March 1991.
[3] January-October 1990.
[4] November 1990—February 1991.

Acoustic Net Pinger

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans for the development of an acoustic net pinger to assist submarines in locating the presence of fishing nets.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A contract is shortly to be placed with Graseby Dynamics Ltd. of Bushey, Hertfordshire for the supply of 100 acoustic net pingers. These pingers will be used in an extended sea trial to assess their effectiveness in a working environment. It is planned that the trial, which will be carried out in the Clyde submarine exercise areas in conjunction with the Clyde Fishermens Association, will begin in early 1993 and last for about 18 months. This contract follows the completion of a technical specification by the maritime division of the Defence Research Agency for which competitive tenders were sought.

EC Proposals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the experts his Department consults on European Community proposals relating to defence matters.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Defence does not come within the ambit of the European Community. It does not therefore make proposals relating to defence matters.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Dartmoor Prison

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the practicability of developing HM prison Dartmoor as a community prison, or as a national resource for prisoners with special needs; and if he will make a statement about the future of the prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Dartmoor is too large to become a community prison in the way HM chief inspector of prisons has recommended. However, as the only category B prison in the south-west of England, it fulfils the needs of those prisoners from that part of the country requiring that level of security. The sex offender unit provides a national resource as an integral part of the recent initiative concerned with such prisoners. It incorporates both the assessment and treatment of sex offenders and will continue to develop as part of the national programme.

Major refurbishment is under way at a cost of £25 million and substantial efforts are being made to develop a positive regime for inmates, an example of which is the new intensive therapy unit.

It is the Government's intention that Dartmoor will continue to provide secure accommodation for category B prisoners in the region.

Police Numbers

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the criteria for assessing areas of urban population in calculating police manpower figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We shall be reviewing the allocation formula used for approving increases in police force establishments later this year in order to take account of the 1991 census data. Part of this review will involve a close scrutiny of the definition of urban areas used in the formula.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further plans he has to stop the use of animals for testing cosmetics.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government have discussed with industry how best to eliminate the testing of cosmetics on animals without putting the public at risk. There has been some progress made in developing alternatives to skin and eye irritancy tests. The Government have called on the European Community to set 1998 as the target date for the replacement of all skin and eye irritancy tests, subject to there being validated non-animal alternatives.

The Government will continue to support work carried out by charitable bodies, academic institutions and industry to develop alternatives to animal testing.

Security Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the report to him by the Security Service Commissioner, pursuant to paragraph 7(3) of schedule 1 to the Security Service Act 1989 relating to retention of records.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. It would not be in the interests of national security to do so.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether records compiled by the Security Service kept in temporary files for which a permanent file is not subsequently set up are destroyed within three years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 22 to 24 of the Security Service Commissioner's annual report for 1991 where he describes the Security Service's policy in relation to temporary records which are not converted into permanent files. Except where no inquiries have been made since the Security Service Act 1989 came into force, such temporary records are now retained so that they can be investigated, if necessary, by the complaints tribunal. The commissioner agreed that this policy was correct in law.

Road Accidents

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of civilian fatalities were caused by road traffic accidents involving stolen motor vehicles in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The information is not available centrally.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for assistance under section 66 of the Race Relations Act 1976 the Commission for Racial Equality has received during the past 12 months; how many applications it supported by providing legal representation during that period; and from how many applicants for whom it initially provided legal representation it later withdrew legal support or funding before the case went to industrial tribunal or county court.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested for the year 1991 is as follows. The number of applications received for assistance under section 66 of the Race Relations Act 1976 received by the Commission for Racial Equality was 1,655.

The number of applications for which the commission's complaints committee agreed to provide legal representation was 388.

The number of applicants for whom the Commission for Racial Equality initially provided legal representation, but from whom on review it later withdrew legal support or funding before the case went to industrial tribunal or county court or was otherwise settled or withdrawn by the complainant was 24.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants who received legal representation provided through the Commission for Racial Equality or its funded solicitors were represented at tribunals or county courts in the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of applicants represented at tribunals or county courts who received legal representation through the CRE in 1991 was 54.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his response to the Morgan report on safer communities from the standing conference of crime prevention; and what action he proposes to implement any of the recommendations.

Mr. Jack: The recommendations in the Morgan report ranged wider than had been expected under the working group's terms of reference.

The consideration of the report is now being undertaken but it is taking longer than anticipated because of the additional material to be evaluated. I hope to be able to make an announcement in the near future.

Firearms

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences have been committed with stolen shotguns in each police force area in each year from 1985.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) shotguns, (b) firearms and (c) rounds of ammunition have been yielded as a result of each gun amnesty declared since 1962.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is given in the table.

Year of amnesty	Shotguns	Firearms	Rounds of ammunition
1965	2,761	37,739	1,694,000
1968	9,400	15,688	795,000
1988	11,254	31,471	1,511,000

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many thefts of shotguns there have been in each police force area in each year from 1985 (a) from domestic premises and (b) from all premises.

Mr. Jack: The number of notifiable offences in which shotguns were reported to have been stolen from (a) domestic premises and (b) all premises, in each police force area in each year from 1985 to 1990 are given in the tables.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider declaring a firearms amnesty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no plans at present to declare a firearms amnesty. The last one was held in 1988 in conjunction with the introduction of major new legislation on firearms. We would not wish to encourage people to think that if they hold weapons illegally or use them for criminal purposes, they will be given regular opportunities to dispose of them without the risk of prosecution.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of (a) shotguns and (b) other firearms held in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Estimates of the number of shotguns and firearms held on licence in England and Wales at the end of 1990 were published in Home Office statistical bulletin 23/91—paragraphs 3 and 7. A copy of this bulletin is in the Library.

The information for Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the relevant Secretary of State.

Condoms

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in what circumstances condoms are issued to prisoners on release from (a) women's and (b) men's prisons;

(2) if he will make it his policy to offer condoms to all prisoners on their release from prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Procedural guidelines issued to prison governors in November 1991 advised that the period leading up to release is an important time for educational measures and for individual counselling of HIV-infected prisoners and others with lifestyles which suggest that they may themselves be at risk or that they may be a risk to other people. The guidelines also recommended that governors consider introducing schemes under which all prisoners released—and perhaps those going on home leave—have discrete access to a small supply of free condoms. Several establishments—including at least one for women—operate such schemes. We are reviewing prisons HIV/AIDS policy generally, including policy on the issue of condoms.

West Yorkshire Police Force

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been (a) the total funding and (b) the established number of full-time officers of the West Yorkshire police force in each of the past five years; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of funding to meet the public demands of this service.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Over the last five years expenditure and the police establishment of the West Yorkshire police have been increased as follows:

Year	Expenditure £ million	Establishment
1987-88	129·1	5,204
1988-89	149·4	5,227
1989-90	167·0	5,259
1990-91	[1]193·7	5,281
1991-92	[2]218·5	5,295
1992-93	n/a	5,295

[1] Because of change in capital financing arrangements in 1990, some caution should be used in comparing 1990-91 and 1991-92 with earlier years.
[2] Estimated.
n/a = Not available.

The Government are satisfied that the West Yorkshire police authority is able to meet its obligations to provide an efficient police force.

Police Cells

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted prisoners were held in places other than prisons for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The annual averages for convicted prisoners held in police cells, who, but for the lack of available places should otherwise have been in prison custody, for each year since figures have been available are as follows:

	Annual average
1981	0
1982	0
1983	0
1984	0
1985	0
1986	0
1987	0
1988	99
1989	7
1990	213
1991	385

Iraq (Sanctions)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis into the investigations by the Metropolitan police into potential sanctions breaking trade between British and Danish companies and Iraq before, at the time of, or since the Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Metropolitan police has carried out no investigations into potential sanction-breaking trade between British and Danish companies and Iraq.

The Metropolitan and City police company fraud department was involved in discussions with the Department of Trade and Industry, HM Customs and Excise and others. It was decided that allegations of sanction breaking would be referred to HM Customs and Excise for investigation.

Public Events (Policing)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown by constabulary of the amount of money raised in the last financial year by charging for a police presence at sporting, social and other functions and events.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement outlining his policy on the allocation of funds raised by charging for a police presence at sporting, social and other functions, indicating whether such funds must be allocated to the police budget, or whether they may be used by a local authority for other purposes.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Section 8(1) of the Police Act 1964 requires all receipts of the police authority to be paid into the police fund. It is for the police authority, subject where appropriate to the approval of the county council, to decide how the financial resources available to it should be applied.

Maxwell Pension Funds

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to withdraw passports from British citizens under investigation in connection with the Maxwell pension funds.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Withdrawal of passport facilities would be considered in certain circumstances, for example, where a warrant for arrest has been issued in the United Kingdom or where a person was wanted by the police on suspicion of a serious crime.

The courts also have certain powers to require the surrender of a passport pending trial and in connection with certain civil actions.

Bail

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to ensure that bail is not available to those previously convicted of rape if they are brought before a court on a subsequent charge of a crime involving violence.

Mr. Jack: At present we have no plans to introduce legislation for this purpose. The Bail Act 1976, as amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1988, already makes special provision for cases in which a defendant is accused of murder, attempted murder, manslaughter, rape or attempted rape. It requires a court which grants bail to such a defendant in the face of prosecution objections to give its reasons for so doing. This provision is intended to ensure that the court addresses the issue fully.

PRIME MINISTER

Street Children, Brazil

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about his meeting with Mr. Paulo Melo, the president of the Brazilian parliamentary commission inquiring into the killing of South American street children; what representations he made to the Brazilian authorities about the killings and sale of Brazilian children into sex slavery; and if he will take diplomatic and economic measures against Brazil until the Brazilian authorities bring the perpetrators to justice.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my statement on 15 June 1992, c Official Report, columns 649-64.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 16 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 16 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Argentina (Aircraft Sales)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his representations in Washington about the sale of United States A4s to Argentina.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 June 1992]: We are in close touch with the United States Government on the question of arms sales to Argentina. The United States Government understand our concerns about arms sales which might affect our security interests in the Falkland Islands as do our other allies.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the level of expenditure in each of the last 10 years on the civil list; how the rate of change annually has compared with the annual changes in the retail prices index; and what payments have been made and to whom in each of these years.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 11 June 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

The information on expenditure for the period 1983 to 1990 is contained in the report of the royal trustees laid before the House of Commons on 15 October 1990 (HC629). As the report explains, the pre-1991 system required voted supplements to be paid annually to the standing services on the Consolidated Fund. It was thought more consistent with the dignity of the Crown and better financial practice to replace that system from 1 January 1991 with a payment fixed at £7·9 million a year for 10 years to cover Her Majesty's statutory expenses; the arrangements enable any surplus in the early years to be accumulated to meet any subsequent deficit. During the same period, the increase in the retail price, index averaged 5·8 per cent. a year.

ENVIRONMENT

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the responsibilities and duties of his Department and any agency which reports to his Department in relation to inshore waters, intertidal areas and maritime land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's memorandum on this subject which was submitted to the Environment Committee of this House in the previous Session. It has now been published by HMSO as part of the Environment Committee's report on coastal zone protection and planning, volume II, minutes of evidence and appendices.

Orimulsion

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration his Department has given to the environmental implications of the disposal of the ash residue from burning orimulsion at power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Applications have been made to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to burn orimulsion at four power stations. None of these has been determined. In determining these applications, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will consider the environmental implications of all releases from the process to all three media: air, water and land. Ash produced by burning orimulsion is classed as a release to land.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the total amount of local authority capital receipts set aside which have not as yet been applied to debt redemption.

Mr. Baldry: Local authority returns indicate that their stock of unapplied capital receipts set aside as provision for credit liabilities at 31 March 1991 was £5·1 billion. It is estimated that at the same date local authorities' outstanding debt stood at around £47 billion.

Fuel Efficiency

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to set minimum standards for fuel use efficiency.

Mr. Maclean: It is already the Government's policy to press for agreement in the European Community on minimum efficiency standards for a wide range of equipment. A directive setting minimum standards of energy efficiency for gas and oil-fired boilers has already been adopted.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to set standards for acceptable loss of energy or fuel in distribution, and to ensure that losses above test standard be charged against the profits of the industry.

Mr. Maclean: No. We have created a competitive environment for fuel suppliers and it is in their own interest to reduce losses in transmission.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to set standards of fuel use efficiency for the energy-generating industry.

Mr. Maclean: No. We have created a competitive environment for energy generators such that it is in their own interest to use fuel more efficiently. An indication of this is the electricity industry's plans for new electricity generating stations of considerably higher efficiency.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being undertaken by his Department to promote the co-generation of heat and power.

Mr. Maclean: The Government fully recognise the environmental and energy efficiency benefits of combined heat and power—co-generation—and seek to ensure that CHP faces no unnecessary legislative or institutional barriers to its implementation. The Energy Efficiency Office—EEO—of the Department, in conjunction with technical staff at energy technology support unit and building research energy conservation support unit, is responsible for promoting the wider use of the technology, in cost-effective locations. It manages this through the best practice programme which provides independent and authoritative advice and information on energy use and efficiency in industry and commerce as well as in the public sector and in housing. In addition to the project profiles and publications produced, there is a continuing programme of CHP seminars and site visits.

The EEO also works closely with the Combined Heat and Power Association, the representative body of the CHP industry.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what public information campaigns are currently being undertaken by his Department to promote energy conservation among the general public; and how much funding has been allocated to each information campaign.

Mr. Maclean: The Department is currently running the "Helping the Earth Begins at Home" campaign, launched last November and expected to operate for a minimum of three years. The campaign, which has a budget of at least £10 million, aims to encourage householders to make their homes more energy efficient and thereby help combat global warming.

Carbon Dioxide

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific changes will be implemented on energy policy by his Department in the light of the policy to stabilise carbon dioxide emissions at 1990 levels by the year 2000.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 13 May at column 136 and to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves) on 15 May at column 237.

Marine Conservation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts are currently undertaken by his Department to deal with the conservation and sustainable management of shared seas.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom plays a very active role in the work of the Oslo and Paris conventions, the London dumping convention, the North sea and Irish sea conferences, the International North Sea task force, the Irish Sea co-ordination group, the International Maritime Organisation, the European Community as it bears on maritime matters such as the common fisheries policy, and the small cetaceans agreement under the Bonn convention on migratory species. Most recently, it has participated actively in the drafting of the oceans chapter of Agenda 21 for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and has, jointly with the Republic of Ireland, appointed a scientific co-ordinator for work to review the state of knowledge of the Irish sea.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to oblige manufacturers to monitor and publish the energy efficiency levels of their processes and the energy costs of their products.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to bring forward proposals to oblige manufacturers, either of imported or home produced goods, to publish the energy efficiency levels of their processes or the energy costs of their products. Although gathering meaningful information for comparative purposes is possible and is done in certain processes, for the majority of finished products the complications and cost of obtaining the data outweigh the benefits.

However, my Energy Efficiency Office through its best practice programme publishes energy consumption guides, where these are meaningful, on specific processing steps. The best practice programme also promotes energy efficiency at all steps of manufacture.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the contribution of energy efficiency measures over the next seven years in reducing carbon dioxide emissions.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 14 May to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), column 200.

Community Environmental Programmes

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to issue low interest loans to urban and rural community organisations, small businesses and individuals involved in community environmental action programmes.

Mr. Maclean: The new rural action scheme which we recently announced as part of our action for the countryside package will provide grants in support of a wide range of local environmental initiatives in England at parish level. This is in addition to £4·054 million awarded by the Department for environmental projects through the environmental grant fund and the special grants programme in 1992-1993. We have no plans for low interest loans for environmental programmes.

Environmental Impact Assessments

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is currently undertaken by his Department to ensure the environmental impact assessments are conducted as early as possible in a project cycle.

Mr. Maclean: Where a project which is the subject of a planning application requires environmental assessment, the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 require the applicant to prepare and submit with the application an environmental statement setting out the applicant's own assessment of the likely environmental effects of the proposed development. This ensures that the environmental information—the applicant's environmental statement and any representations from statutory consultees and the general public—is taken into account in the decision making process.

DOE circular 15/88 and the Department's booklet "Environmental Assessment—A guide to the procedures" advise developers to discuss with the planning authority the scope of the environmental statement before its preparation is begun and to approach statutory consultees and other bodies concerned with environmental issues at an early stage.

Public Information

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to allow public access to environmental impact assessments, environmental audit data and monitoring results and to information about the production, use and disposal of hazardous substances.

Mr. Maclean: It is my Department's policy to continue to work towards the maximum freedom of public access to environmental information, subject to commercial, personal, confidentiality and national security considerations.

Flora, Fauna and Habitats Directive

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking to implement the EC flora, fauna and habitats directive.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom's current nature protection provisions give this country a firm basis for implementation of the directive. We are considering what further provisions are necessary to enable the directive to come fully into force within the two years prescribed.

At the same time the Government's scientific advisers are working on the criteria for site selection as the first step towards compiling the United Kingdom's national list of candidate sites to be considered as sites of Community importance.

Heathrow Terminal

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received copies of the consultation documents published by BAA plc in respect of its wish to build a fifth terminal at Heathrow airport; and if he will make it his policy to call in the intended formal planning application and hold a public inquiry.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. and learned Friend was given notice of BAA plc's consultation proposals for a fifth terminal at Heathrow airport. He is aware that a planning application may be made later in the year for the terminal, associated link roads to the M25 and connecting rail access to central London.

In the absence of any formal application, it would not be right for my right hon. and learned Friend to decide now whether to call in the application for his own decision. He will consider this carefully when any application is made.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what controls or incentives, such as might be incorporated into the grant system, his Department offers to the authorities responsible for places of worship to assist them in undertaking the necessary work to make their premises accessible to disabled people.

Mr. Baldry: Part M of the Building Regulations requires reasonable provision to be made for access and facilities for disabled people to and within new and extended places of worship. The provisions are for the benefit of disabled people, including those with impaired sight or hearing. The approved document, which accompanies part M, provides guidance on how the requirements might be satisfied.

Incinerators

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of whether plants and incinerators proposed for London will breach (a) World Health Organisation standards and (b) EC standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: None. Assessment of the environmental effects of these installations is for the appropriate local planning authority or my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to take into account in their consideration of whether to grant consents and for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to consider before authorising the relevant processes.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will take a strategic look at the location of plants and incinerators in London.

Mr. Maclean: No.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration his Department is giving to the consequences new plants and incinerators in London will have upon rates of respiratory illness in their locality.

Mr. Maclean: None. These are for the appropriate local planning authority or my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to take into account in their consideration of whether to grant consent for the proposals.

Species and Eco-systems

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to establish United Kingdom-wide surveys on species and eco-systems.

Mr. Maclean: Such surveys are carried out by the three country conservation agencies and co-ordinated by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee for the purposes of the quinquennial review of species and the designation of sites of special scientific interest within Great Britain. In Northern Ireland, the Environment Service of the Department of the Environment (NI) carries out similar surveys for site and species protection.

Falconers

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many licences are currently issued to falconers; and what are the terms and conditions of the licences.

Mr. Maclean: To date, no licences have been issued to falconers this year. In 1991, 65 licences were issued in England, Scotland and Wales to fly birds of prey at blackbirds, skylarks, song thrushes, meadow pipits and black-headed gulls.

Licences are subject to conditions restricting them to the period 1 September to 28 February; imposing a limit of 50 on the number of quarry which may be killed; requiring that the bird of prey to which the licence refers is properly ringed and registered; and requiring that a return showing the birds killed be made by 31 March.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the cost of supervision of falconers, including keeper's time, in the New Forest for 1991 and to date for 1992;

(2) how many animals and birds, and of which species, were taken by falconers in the New Forest in 1991 and to date in 1992.

Mr. Maclean: Licences issued to fly birds of prey at quarry do not require falconers to be supervised. No information is available on the costs of any local requirements that may apply in the New Forest.

Falconers' returns show only the total numbers of each bird species killed under licence; no details are available on the areas from which quarry is taken.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to propose legislation relating to regulation of the conduct of car boot sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Several existing statutory controls are relevant to the regulation of car boot sales. Thus, although the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988—the GDO—gives a general grant of planning permission for the temporary use of land for markets, including car boot sales, for up to 14 days in total in any calendar year, use for more than 14 days requires specific planning permission. A local planning authority may make a direction under article 4 of the GDO which withdraws this general permission and so requires a specific planning application.

The Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 enables local authorities to require the market operator and the site occupier to give them not less than one month's notice of a forthcoming market. The notice gives the authority time to make any necessary provision to avoid disturbance.

The Environmental Protection Act 1990 requires local authorities to ensure that their land is kept clear of litter and refuse. Since 1 July 1991 authorities have been able to extend this duty to the owners of land used for markets, if there is a problem of persistent littering, by designating the land concerned a litter control area.

I do not consider that further legislation is needed.

Assured Tenancy Scheme

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new lets have been created as a result of the assured tenancy scheme introduced in the Housing Act 1980.

Mr. Baldry: By 1 April 1988, a total of 6,700 tenancies had been created by the assured tenancy scheme introduced in the Housing Act 1980. No new tenancies could be created under this scheme after 15 January 1989. After that date, new assured tenancies would be of the type introduced by the Housing Act 1988.

Smog

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent initiatives have been taken by his Department to alert the public to the dangers of summertime smog.

Mr. Maclean: On 22 May, my Department published a leaflet entitled "Summertime smog—how to help prevent it". This gives a practical guide on what individuals can do to limit the emissions of air pollutants which cause summertime smog. It also contains details of how to obtain information on the levels of air pollution in the United Kingdom and associated health advice. This is available to the media, on Ceefax, and, since 6 May, on a free telephone line, 0800 556677.

Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made by his Department in developing an integrated approach to pollution prevention.

Mr. Maclean: Integrated pollution control was introduced by part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and became effective from 1 April 1991. Implementation is being phased in over a five-year period.

Opencast Mining

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the precise terms of reference of his monitoring exercise in respect of the effectiveness of mineral planning guidance 3 in relation to opencast mining; and if he will give the start date and last date of this consultation exercise.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 2 June, at column 377.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent initiatives have been taken by his Department to raise public knowledge of ozone-depleting substances and actions the public can take to mitigate their unintended release to the atmosphere.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace), at column 266.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent CFCs are still needed by the refrigeration and air conditioning industries in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Following a proposal by the United Kingdom, the European Community decided earlier this year that it should seek to tighten the controls in the Montreal protocol so that CFC production and consumption had to be phased out by the end of 1995, subject to any exemptions for essential uses. We now need to consider whether an earlier phase-out is possible within the community, and whether production for essential uses is likely to be necessary. To assist in this, the Department has commissioned a study by March Consulting Group on CFC use within the United Kingdom refrigeration and air conditioning industry. The study will consider the pattern of CFC used by the industry and the extent to which substitution by other refrigerants is taking place; how the pattern of use is likely to change between now and the end of the century; and the quantities of CFCs that industry will need in that period and the extent to which this can be met from recycled material.

Council House Sales

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will allow Stockport to use the capital receipts it has accumulated through sale of council houses to invest in housing.

Mr. Baldry: An increase in spending financed from local authorities' capital receipts would be an addition to public expenditure in just the same way as an increase financed by credit approvals to permit additional borrowing. However, by placing constraints on spending from receipts, the Government are able to issue a greater amount of credit approvals to those local authorities where housing needs are greatest and where resources can be put to best use.

Housing Authorities

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the top 10 performing housing authorities in each of the past two years; and what position in the rank order is held by Stockport.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has made no ranked assessment of the performance of housing authorities. However, in the context of the housing investment programme allocations published last December, the previous Secretary of State issued a list of 51 authorities judged to be well ahead of the field in comparison with others in their DOE region. Stockport was included in the list for north-west region.

Empty Properties

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Audit Commission benchmark for empty properties; and what is the level of empty properties in Stockport.

Mr. Baldry: The latest discussion by the Audit Commission of options open to local authorities for the better use of their housing stock is contained in the report "Developing Local Authority Housing Strategies", which was published on 28 May. In the report, the commission refers to benchmarks for void turn-around times for local authorities of six weeks in London and three weeks elsewhere. The commission suggests that if long-term voids were held to 1 per cent. of stock nearly all authorities with void intervals within these benchmarks would achieve a void level of less than 2 per cent.

The latest available information on Stockport's empty council dwellings relates to 1 April 1991 and was provided by the council in its 1991 housing investment programme return, a copy of which is in the Library.

Local Authorities (Debts)

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average figure for metropolitan authorities of debt in relation to housing stock; and what is the figure for Stockport.

Mr. Baldry: No information is now collected by the Department on debt relating to housing stock. However, figures published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy suggest that outstanding debt relating to housing at 31 March 1991 was £61 million for Stockport, or £210 per head of population, and £6·2 billion for all metropolitan districts, or around £560 per head.

Council Waiting Lists

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are on the waiting list for council accommodation in Stockport.

Mr. Baldry: The latest available information on the number of households on the waiting list relates to 1 April 1991 and was provided by Stockport metropolitan district council in its April 1991 housing investment programme return, a copy of which is in the Library.

City Grant, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the position of the application by 3D Ltd. for a city grant in connection with the west end scheme in Bradford.

Mr. Squire: My Department received a revised application for City Grant from 3D on 15 October 1991, for a first phase of the west end scheme, comprising offices in Aldermanbury, and a European pavilion with a multi-storey car park. The developer had to be asked to supply additional information and the application is now under appraisal.

Wild Birds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of licences granted for taking and the numbers of birds so taken from the wild, for each species of avian predator in each year since 1987.

Mr. Maclean: Details of licences issued to take birds of prey from the wild are given in the United Kingdom's annual derogation reports to the European Commission under the terms of the EC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds. Copies of each report for the years 1987 to 1991 have been placed in the Library of the House.

RECHAR

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when transitional arrangements for RECHAR funding in 1992-93 will be announced.

Mr. Robin Squire: The transitional arrangements for 1992-93 for the provision of public expenditure cover for European regional development fund grants to be received, including those under the European Community's RECHAR initiative, will be announced very soon.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, columns 155-56, if he will extend the policy of strict control over development proposals for sites of special scientific interest to one of complete protection unless a question of public safety is at stake.

Mr. Maclean: No. I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 24 September 1991 announcing additional safeguards for SSSIs which are now incorporated in DOE circular 1/92.

I also refer the hon. Member to the consultation draft of the planning policy guidance note on nature conservation.

I will arrange for these documents to be sent to the hon. Member.

Traffic, Greenwich

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 154, if he will publish figures on the increase in black smoke concentrations in the Greenwich area in recent years.

Mr. Maclean: The annual mean black smoke concentrations measured at the Greenwich site in $\mu g/m^3$ were as follows:

Year
1985-86	7
1986-87	13
1987-88	11
1988-89	14
1989-90	18
1990-91	20

Waltham Forest HAT

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to agree a corporate plan with the Waltham Forest housing action trust.

Mr. Baldry: A corporate plan has not yet been received from the Waltham Forest housing action trust. It will be agreed as soon as possible after receipt.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on how many home owners threatened with repossession by banks and building societies have been assisted in each London borough in 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Baldry: Figures are not available in the form requested. The Council of Mortgage Lenders estimates that the combined effect of measures taken by the Government and lenders since December 1991 will save some 55,000 repossessions in the United Kingdom this year.

Mineral Planning

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who appoints members of mineral planning authorities; to whom they report; and what are their terms of reference.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 15 June 1992]: Within the shire counties, London and the metropolitan districts, the members of the mineral planning authorities are not appointed but are elected through the local government elections. In national parks, the Secretary of State appoints one third of the members of the mineral planning authority, the remaining two thirds are appointed by the local authorities involved.

Members of mineral planning authorities would normally report to the chairperson of any committee on which they sit; in national parks they would normally report to the chairman of the board or committee of the park.

There are no fixed terms of reference for mineral planning authorities.

Ferro-Alloys Chimney

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how emission levels from the Ferro-Alloys chimney in Glossop will be monitored by his Department to ensure there is no breaching of the limits laid down by it.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 June 1992]: Emissions from the chimney at Ferro-Alloys, Glossops, will be monitored continuously using recording instruments. The records will be scrutinised by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Housing, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many private and public sector properties are currently vacant in the city of Liverpool; what incentives he will provide to Liverpool city council to introduce homesteading schemes; what penalties he will impose on private and public sector landlords who fail to let properties; what is the estimated annual rent and community charge lost on empty private and public sector properties (a) throughout the United Kingdom and (b) in Liverpool; if he will meet leaders of Liverpool city council to discuss a plan of action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [pursuant to his answer, 3 June 1992, c. 542]: At 1 April 1991, the number of vacant properties in Liverpool was 5,733 local authority, 843 housing association and 7,908 privately owned.

As far as local authority stock is concerned, the housing subsidy rules penalise those councils that have more than 2 per cent. of their stock empty and reward those who do better. To further encourage best use of housing resources the Department will be introducing a pilot scheme to promote homesteading of local authority stock, linked with the estate action programme. For private homes, we do not believe that property owners should be forced to let accommodation against their will but our policies are geared to creating the conditions to encourage landlords to let their properties.

The estimated rent loss, for 1991-92, on empty public sector properties was over £136 million for England and £6·4 million for Liverpool. There are no figures available for the private sector.

There are no personal community charge losses on empty properties although the council can levy a standard community charge on most unoccupied domestic properties. This can act as an incentive for landlords to find tenants.

My right hon. and learned Friend will be replying shortly to an invitation from Councillor Harry Rimmer, leader of Liverpool city council, to visit the city. The estate action programme and the vacant dwellings initiative and the prospect of a housing action trust are examples of joint initiatives tackling the city's housing problems. In addition, the council's success in round one of city challenge will lead to a major transformation in the city centre with substantial benefits for its residents.

Cash Limits

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any further changes to announce his Department's cash limits for 1992-93.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his answer, 4 June 1992, c. 608]: In addition, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the DOE/UA non-voted cash limit will be increased by £159,492,000 from £829,603,000 to £989,095,000. This includes £22,992,000 transferred from the Department of Trade and Industry for inner cities task forces' projects.

It also includes an increase in grant in aid of £49,300,000 to the London Docklands development corporation for the eastern extension of the docklands light railway and capital expenditure relating to the railway.

Also, £81,800,000 is transferred from the Department of Transport to enable the corporation to take over operational responsibilities for the railway.

A net figure of a further £5,400,000 is required for setting up the Birmingham development corporation, progressing the Bristol spine road, supporting the Manchester Olympic bid committee's preparation of the bid for the 2000 Olympics and transferring inner cities research to the Department's housing vote.

All these changes are either claims on the reserve or are offset elsewhere and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Law of the Sea

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts are being made by his Department to bring into force the United Nations convention on the law of the sea.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

We are working towards the achievement of a universally acceptable convention. While many of the provisions of this convention are helpful, there are serious objections to part XI, concerning sea-bed mining.

On 16 and 17 June my officials will be participating in informal consultations chaired by the United Nations Secretary-General in order to seek solutions to the problems in part XI.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what controls or incentives, such as might be incorporated into the grant system, his Department offers to the managers of sub-post offices to assist them in undertaking the necessary work to make their premises and services accessible for disabled people.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

There is no Government scheme for offering grants to sub-postmasters to assist them in making their premises and services available for the disabled. The provision of premises to an acceptable standard for carrying on Post Office Counters business is a matter for the sub-postmaster, usually at his or her own expense, as laid down in the sub-postmasters' standard contract conditions.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since his announcement on 3 June.

Mr. Mellor: Since my announcement on 3 June, Official Report, column 570, I am pleased to inform the House of the acceptance of a further six offers: a painting, "Up and Out" by Richard Hamilton in lieu of £7,000; Hambledon cricket club account book in lieu of £39,120; two paintings, "John Frederick Sackville, 3rd Duke of Dorset" by Sir Joshua Reynolds and "Lady Frances Cranfield" by Sir Anthony Van Dyck in lieu of £404,544; two busts by Rysbrack in lieu of £418,920; a painting "Lady Charlotte Bonham-Carter" by Peter Greenham in lieu of £8,500; and land known as Nolands farm in lieu of £57,920.

The paintings "Up and Out" and "Lady Charlotte Bonham-Carter" have been allocated to the Tate gallery. The two paintings by Reynolds and Van Dyck "John Frederick Sackville, 3rd Duke of Dorset" and "Lady Frances Cranfield" are to remain at Knole house, and the Rysbrack busts are to remain at Hagley hall. Nolands farm has been allocated to the National Trust. No decision has yet been taken on the allocation of the Hambledon cricket club account book.

Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Society

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received about the situation within and around the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Society; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 June 1992]: I am in close touch with the Arts Council about the situation and shall be seeing the chairman of the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Society on 16 June.

I am anxious that the current high artistic standing of the Royal Liverpool philharmonic orchestra under its music director, Libor Pesek, should not be jeopardised.

EDUCATION

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

Mr. Forman: The programme for market testing activities within the Department and the Teachers' Pensions Agency in 1992-93 and later years has yet to be finalised.

School Premises

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will now repeal DES regulation 909; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Department is currently reviewing the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981, SI No. 909, as amended, in conjunction with the Welsh Office. While the review is in progress, the 1981 regulations will remain in force. The results of the review are expected to be available later this year.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his estimate of the consequence of DES regulation 909 so far as the upgrading of school playing fields is concerned.

Mr. Forth: The Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981, SI No. 909, introduced new quality and suitability requirements for playing fields in addition to minimum area standards. In the 1986 survey of school buildings, local education authorities reported that 5 per cent. of primary and 6 per cent. of secondary schools in the sample needed resources to bring their playing fields up to the 1981 regulation standards. The national estimate of cost, based on the figures reported, is £60 million at November 1985 prices, or £66 million at first quarter 1992 prices.

The survey did not identify the type of improvements in quality and suitability which may have been required. Some of the deficiencies will have been dealt with since 1986.

Non-vocational Education

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will review the funding arrangements for adult education; and what representations he has received about the future of non-vocational education provision.

Mr. Forman: There is no need for a review. Funding arrangements in 1993-94 will reflect LEAs' changed duties under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992. In calculating the transfer of funds from local authorities to the new further education sector, the Government will leave within local authority standard spending the resources attributable to those courses which fall to LEAs' responsibilities.

My right hon. Friend has received a small number of representations about LEA expenditure on the further education of adults.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to fund the sixth forms of grant-maintained schools through the Further Education Funding Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Further Education Funding Council will not be responsible for funding sixth-forms of schools.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make his policy to require local education authorities to complete statutory special educational needs assessments within a six-month time period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: On 11 June my noble Friend the Minister of State announced in another place the Government's wide-ranging proposals to legislate on special educational needs. They include regulating the time scales within which assessment procedures must be completed. We shall consult widely on the detail of our proposals.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Environmental Research Programmes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he received a copy of the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology's report on environmental research programmes; and what responses he intends to make to the report.

Mr. Waldegrave: The report by the Advisory Council on Science and Technology—ACOST—on environmental research programmes was received by the science and technology secretariat of the Cabinet Office in October 1991. The Government response will be sent to ACOST in July, and published in due course.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to make publicly available the background papers supporting the decision to develop the citizens charter; and what requests his Department has received to date for this information.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Citizens Charter policies have been fully set out in Cm 1599 and charters relating to individual services. I have had one request to make available unpublished factual and analytical material on the policy analysis reviews relating to the citizens charter, but the policy analysis review technique has not been used for many years.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 15 June 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 15 June, Official Report, column 399.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tobacco

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Overseas Development Administration's policy towards the sponsoring of agricultural development schemes aimed at enhancing the growing of tobacco crops.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Tobacco is an important crop and a source of export earnings in some developing countries. There is, however, increasing evidence that the health risks associated with tobacco consumption will affect developing countries severely, especially by placing increasing burdens on their health budgets, which in most cases are inadequate to cope.

In these circumstances, it has been Her Majesty's Government's policy since early 1991 that the overseas aid programme should not be used for any purpose which identifiably supports the tobacco sector. Accordingly, no new such bilateral commitments have been undertaken since then. We advocate that multilateral agencies to which we contribute should pursue a similar policy. In addition, we shall continue to help developing countries to reduce their tobacco consumption, and maintain our assistance to farmers dependent on tobacco crops to diversify into alternative activities. The same policy applies to our assistance in eastern Europe and the states of the former Soviet Union.

Know-how Funds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent projects in eastern Europe funded by the know-how fund have to meet environmental criteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund is a technical assistance programme and most of its projects are in sectors where environmental impact is limited or non-existent; for example privatisation, management training, accountancy development and the stimulation of small businesses. For those know-how fund projects with environmental aspects, the criteria used are the same as those operated for the rest of the UK aid programme. There is a tranche of the know-how fund that is available specifically to fund environmental projects.

Community Environmental Action

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much is currently allocated by the Overseas Development Administration to assist community environmental action.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration does not collate data in the format requested. However, some examples of support for community environmental action are the 124 projects at a cost of about £13 million we fund with non-governmental organisations, and the western Ghats forestry project in southern India, to which we are contributing £25 million, which includes programmes for involving local community groups in the planning and management of the forest.

Aid (Energy Efficiency)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much is currently allocated by the Overseas Development Administration to provide more efficient domestic stoves, household lighting and cooling/refrigeration processes in lower-income countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration does not keep records in a form which classifies financial allocations across the aid programme in these categories. Within our allocations for research work £360,000 is committed to examining the more efficient design, production and marketing of domestic stoves.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what level of capital and technical assistance is granted by his Department to lower-income countries to develop training in designing energy efficient systems for use in homes, offices, agriculture and industry.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration does not keep records in a form which enables spending to be identified by the categories requested.

Conservation Research

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much is allocated by the Overseas Development Administration to promote taxonomic and systematic conservation research.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Taxonomic studies form integral components of a number of natural resources management and conservation projects but disaggregated figures for taxonomy as such as not available. Examples include the central Amazonia flora and vegetation project in Brazil, a forest inventory and management project in Ghana, a forest genetics project in Honduras and a plant biodiversity and conservation project in collaboration with the national museums of Kenya.

Human Development Index

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to support the improvement of the human development index prepared by the United Nations Development Programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom welcomes the human development index and the annual human development report in which it appears as a useful contribution to the development debate. Significant improvements have been made since its introduction in 1990, particularly in the use of more recent source data. We will continue to support the report team in the United Nations Development Programme in further improving the index.

Ethiopia

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom Government will support the Ethiopian Government's request for aid for their emergency food security reserve.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have told the World Food Programme that it may draw on the 25,000 tonnes we have promised to supply to WFP's regular programme this year in order to meet this request.

Southern Africa

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken to ensure that United Kingdom and European Community food aid arrives in southern Africa by the end of June; and what aid is provided for port rehabilitation, transport and management.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Food aid for southern Africa needs to flow steadily over the next few months to use all the transport capacity available, and ensure that the supplies do not arrive in the ports all at once. EC and UN food aid is planned with other donors on this basis. A logistics advice centre has recently been set up by the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and the World Food Programme in Harare to assist in the co-ordination of food deliveries.

Support for the rehabilitation and development of ports and island transport routes is an important part of United Kingdom development aid to southern Africa, including over £17 million for the development of Maputo port, and £5·47 million for the repair and rehabilitation for Tanga port in Tanzania. Our present assistance for inland transport includes £31·5 million for the rehabilitation of the Limpopo and Nacala railways in Mozambique, £14 million from the northern transport corridor linking southern Malawi with Dar es Salaam, and £1·27 million for the rehabilitation of the Beira corridor railway.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Restrictions

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the administrative costs involved in enforcing the days at sea restrictions contained in the Sea Fish (Conservation) Bill.

Mr. Curry: The Bill's explanatory and financial memorandum indicates that the cost of administration and enforcement is provisionally estimated at £0·7 million in 1992-93, £2·3 million in 1993-94 and £1·4 million in 1994-95.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will press for other member states to adopt uniform days at sea regulations in line with those he proposes for the British fishing industry.

Mr. Curry: I confirm that we shall be pressing hard for other member states to reduce their fishing effort as part of their 1993-96 multi-annual guidance programme.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will bring forward amendments to the Sea Fish (Conservation) Bill to provide for the effect of bad weather on a fishing vessel's days at sea quota.

Mr. Curry: Days at sea will be allocated to fishing vessels on the basis of their 1991 track records and it will be possible for fishermen to appeal if they think that their record has been depressed by exceptionally bad weather in that year. Once initial allocations have been made, they will not be affected by bad weather in subsequent years.

Fishing Boats (Decommissioning)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sum the Government contribute as part of the European Community's fishing vessel decommissioning grant; what percentage this figure represents of the overall grant; and what are the contributions of other member states.

Mr. Curry: The decommissioning scheme which my right hon. Friend announced on 27 February is expected to cost £25 million. Council regulation 4028/86, as amended, provides for 50 per cent. of this to be reimbursed by the Community—70 per cent. if vessels are scrapped—but operation of the Community budget means that the greater part of any such reimbursement is funded by the Exchequer.

Set-aside Systems

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to be able to publish full and final details of the new set-aside systems.

Mr. Curry: I hope that draft legal texts implementing the Council agreement will be adopted soon. The Commission must then table implementing regulations. Until these have been discussed and agreed in Brussels, we cannot finalise our own detailed national arrangements but we shall do our utmost to provide authoritative guidance as soon as possible.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his EC counterparts on measures to ensure that member states implement the new arrangements for set-aside systems.

Mr. Curry: Detailed Commission implementing rules will be discussed by member states once the legal texts implementing the Council's decision have been agreed. EC Agriculture Ministers are also considering proposals for a new, integrated administration and control system for certain aid schemes, including set-aside. If, despite these rules, other member states make payments to producers who have not met the appropriate set-aside requirement, their claims for EC reimbursement of the area payments can be disallowed.

Rabies

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he has made to safeguard Britain's high health standards on protection from rabies.

Mr. Gummer: Agreement was reached in the Agricultural Council on 15 June on the so-called "Balai" directive which lays down trading conditions for species not covered by other Community rules. These include a number of species currently subject to quarantine for rabies on import to the United Kingdom. The measure covers animals that are traded commercially—not pets accompanying travellers.

The agreement includes strict measures to ensure against the possibility of rabies being introduced into this country. Quarantine remains where the risk of importing the disease exists. The only changes relate to cases where there is no such risk and only involve trade between approved operators after 1 January 1994.

Our existing rules do not require quarantine for farm livestock, which, although susceptible to rabies, present no real disease risk. After January 1994, similar rules will apply to animals such as rabbits, born and bred in the holding of origin, which can be imported with the same degree of safety.

We agreed some particularly tough rules to cover cats and dogs within this directive—that is, largely those imported for breeding purposes. If they are born, and have remained, in a single rabies-free premises, have been vaccinated, and the subsequent blood test has proved that vaccination has been effective, they may be exported to the United Kingdom without quarantine. They must also carry microchip identification, full and acceptable veterinary records, and be carried in an approved manner, in a special vehicle, directly from the place of origin to a previously notified destination where further checks may be carried out if necessary. The veterinary advice is clear that this constitutes as effective a safeguard against rabies as the quarantine system.

Our present arrangements, including quarantine, will continue as far as pet animals are concerned. The arrangements agreed for commercially traded animals provide us with at least the same level of security as the existing system. EC Ministers and the Commission unanimously agreed that they would not contemplate changes in arrangements for pets unless these were at least as effective.

This agreement is a further example of the success obtainable by Britain being at the heart of the Community. We have safeguarded the principle of the single market without lessening the protection of our nation from rabies. Also of importance, the Council agreed to continue with rabies eradication programmes on the continent. Some progress has been made already and we know that other countries are determined to succeed. We all look forward to the day when the Community will be rabies free. The outcome recognises the special situation existing in the British isles and fully safeguards this country against the introduction of rabies.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Kilostream

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those areas of the United Kingdom where Kilostream facilities are not available to industry and commerce.

Mr. Leigh: It is a condition of British Telecom's licence that it provides leased circuits throughout its licensed area to meet all reasonable demands.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many businesses have borrowed money under the small firms loan guarantee scheme in each of the last five years.

Mr. Leigh: The number of businesses is not available, some businesses having had two or more loans. However, the number of applications under the loan guarantee scheme in each of the last five years has been:

	Number
1987-88	1,222
1988-89	2,266
1989-90	3,204
1990-91	3,393
1991-92	2,950

Power Stations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the number of power stations in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) England that burn, or propose to burn, orimulsion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Two power stations in England, at Ince in Cheshire and Richborough in Kent have permission under legislation preceding the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to burn limited amounts of orimulsion. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is considering two applications for authorisations in respect of proposals to burn orimulsion at Pembroke power station in Wales and Padiham power station in Lancashire, England. The electricity supply industry in Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters respectively for the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Aerospace

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the number of jobs provided by the British aerospace industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: The latest official figures from the Business Monitor annual census of production is 174,000 in 1990.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the number of jobs likely to be provided in the United Kingdom if the European fighter aircraft goes into full production.

Mr. Sainsbury: Industry estimates vary between about 20,000 to 30,000 jobs provided or safeguarded directly, and a similar number indirectly with the supporting suppliers of goods and services.

LINK

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications have been received for each category of programme under the LINK scheme; how many of these have been approved in each category; and if he will make a statement on the criteria used in accepting or rejecting an application.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are 30 programmes under the LINK scheme which fit into five broad categories. According to the records maintained by the LINK secretariat, by the end of March 1992 a total of 985 full proposals for projects under LINK programmes had been received, of which 380 had been approved. The table lists the numbers of full proposals and approved projects for each of the categories.

Programme category	Full proposals	Approved projects
Food and Biosciences	346	106
Engineering	294	103
Sensors and Measurement	155	73
Electronics	127	72
Materials and Chemicals	66	29

It is for each programme management committee to decide on the criteria for accepting or rejecting a project within their programme. However, their criteria will include the scientific quality of the proposal and its industrial relevance, its applicability to the priority areas of the programme and the objectives of the LINK initiative. The programme management committees include a number of industrialists and academics who are experts in the topics covered by a specific programme and advise on the selection of projects.

ICSTIS Trustees Compensation Fund

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money has been collected through the Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services trustees compensation fund; how this money has been spent; and if he will make a statement on how the contribution levels to the compensation fund were established.

Mr. Leigh: The Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services is a self-regulatory body for the premium rate service industry. The compensation funds for chatlines and live conversation services are the responsibility of independent trustees and questions about the funds should be addressed to them.

Footwear

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress on the EC regulation seeking to introduce quantitative restrictions on the import of footwear from China.

Mr. Needham: Discussions between member states' officials are continuing in Brussels.

British Nuclear Fuels Limited

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the chairman of BNFL to discuss the removal of civil service pension arrangements from workers being transferred to Urenco.

Mr. Eggar: I meet the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc from time to time to discuss a range of issues. It is not legally possible for staff transferred from BNFL to another company to remain in the relevant pension schemes. BNFL has made it clear that the new pension arrangements will be established following consultation with staff and trade union representatives and that the benefits of the new arrangements will be broadly equivalent to the current schemes.

Prospectus Issues

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the previous investigations his Department has carried out into prospectus issues in respect of (a) listed or quoted companies or companies seeking a listing or quote on the stock exchange for their shares and (b) other companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Inquiries by inspectors appointed under sections 432 and 442 of the Companies Act 1985 to investigate and report on the affairs and/or membership of companies are wide ranging. However, in some such cases, part of the investigation may relate to the circumstances surrounding and documentation relating to the issue or acquisition of shares. For example, of those reports under sections 432 and 442 published since 1 January 1987, the following make significant reference to such matters.

Company Name	Date of publication

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy on obtaining books, reports and video-cassettes for his departmental library at the request of hon. Members.

Mr. Eggar: My Department purchases the books and other information sources needed to carry out its work. Its library does not provide a service to hon. Members.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what involvement Her Majesty's Government expect to have in the forthcoming review conference of the convention on the physical protection of nuclear materials.

Mr. Eggar: Given the United Kingdom's degree of expertise on physical protection, which has long been recognised internationally, Her Majesty's Government expect to play an important and constructive role in the forthcoming conference.

Multi-level Marketing

Mr. Rowe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints about multi-level marketing companies were received by his Department in the latest 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 12 June 1992]: Over the last 12 months we have received more than 500 written queries and possibly twice as many telephone queries on aspects of this subject. Most question the legality of schemes. Pyramid selling and similar selling schemes as specified in the Fair Trading Act 1973 are legal provided they comply with the relevant legislation.

British Footwear Manufacturers Federation

Mr. Trimble: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what dates his Department replied to the faxes from the British Footwear Manufacturers Federation dated 12 and 29 May.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 12 June 1992:] The fax message sent to my officials on 12 May contained information from the federation and thus called for no immediate reply. As regards the fax message sent to me on 29 May, my officials discussed it with the federation by telephone that day and I replied in writing on 9 June.

Expo 92

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is the country of origin of the bottled water being served in the English pavilion at Expo '92 in Seville; and how many restaurants and bars there are in the pavilion;

(2) if he will make a statement on the reasons why no English wine is being served in the British pavilion at Expo '92 in Seville;

(3) what is the country of origin of the wine being served in the English pavilion at Expo '92 in Seville; and what quantity of wine is held by each outlet.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 June 1992]: A range of English wines is served in the British pavilion at Expo '92. At present the caterers hold a central stock of more than 50 cases as supplies for the three restaurants and one bar in the British pavilion. These stocks are replenished as required. Also, all the bottled water served in the British pavilion is British.

EC Proposals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the experts his Department consults on European Community proposals relating to trade and industry matters.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 June 1992]: My department undertakes extensive consultation with a range of expert bodies and individuals in respect of European Community proposals. They are too numerous to list.

Military Equipment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of total visible exports were accounted for by items falling under those tariffs heading which have been identified as covering purely military equipment in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 June 1992:] Military equipment accounted for 2 per cent. of United Kingdom visible exports in 1991. Information for 1990 is not available.

Note:

1. Military equipment is defined, in terms of the Standard International Trade Classification (Revision 3), as aircraft and associated equipment (all tariff headings in division 79 other than those identified as "civil"; and excluding spacecraft and launch vehicles); warships (tariff heading 890600 100) and arms and ammunition for (military purposes) (division 98).

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether plutonium originating in United Kingdom reactors has been exported to, or imported from foreign countries in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) the current year to date; and what plans there are for the export and import of plutonium in the remainder of the current year.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 15 June 1992]: Information about the imports and exports of civil plutonium is included in the plutonium figures published annually. For the 1989-90 and 1990-91 financial years, I refer the hon. Member to the press releases issued by the former Department of Energy and placed in the Library of the House on 18 October 1990 and 17 October 1991 respectively. Similar information will be published later this year in respect of the 1991-92 financial year. Future plans are a commercial matter for the importers and exporters of the plutonium.

Sellafield

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with British Nuclear Fuels plc as to when the company intends to commission the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 15 June 1992]: The commissioning process is already under way. Radioactive fuel will be progressively introduced into the various sections of the plant starting in late 1992.

Pressure Vessel Integrity Committee

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the names and qualifications of the Pressure Vessel Integrity Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 15 June 1992]: The Pressure Vessels Consultative Committee acts as a forum for discussion of relevant national and EC legislation, and is one of the bodies consulted by the Department concerning proposed EC directives in its field. Its present membership is:

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will make public details of all communications he receives from the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission on the safety consequences of coal privatisation.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to the reply, 22 May 1992, c. 332]: I have today received a letter from Sir John Cullen on the safety implications of the privatisation of the coal industry. [1] Commencement of TEC development phase.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 119, if he will place in the Library a copy of the eligibility criteria for the chairmen of training and enterprise councils in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The eligibility criteria for the TEC directors and chairmen are laid out in paras 6.3 and 6.4 of the TEC operating agreement 1992-93, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the rise in the cost of construction of the proposed Cardiff bay barrage since November 1990; to what extent such an increase is attributable to (a) inflation and (b) design changes; for (b) if he will give details; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have regular discussions with the chairman of Cardiff Bay development corporation about a range of issues, as do my officials and officers of the corporation.

In November 1990 the development corporation issued and EC prequalification notice which showed the estimated cost of construction of the proposed Cardiff bay barrage as £86 million at November 1988 prices. No recosting exercise was undertaken for the purposes of the prequalification notice since it was intended to be purely indicative for companies with an interest in tendering formally at a later stage. The equivalent figure in the prequalification notice issued this month was £112 million at 1991-92 prices.

Of the change, £7·9 million is attributable to design changes and the remainder to inflation and roundings in the November 1988 price figure.

The main details of the design changes were:

(i) outer harbour dredging;
(ii) additional fish pass requirements;
(iii) change to the way in which the barrage meets land at Queen Alexandra dock;
(iv) change of embankment cross section;
(v) amendments to the design and size of the then proposed feeding ground at Wentloog lagoon.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will extend his policy of strict control over development proposals for sites of special scientific interest to one of complete protection unless there is a question of public safety at stake.

Mr. David Hunt: The revised arrangements published in Welsh Office circular 1/92 should ensure that nature conservation interests are adequately protected in the consideration of applications for planning permission. I have no proposals to extend them.

Parc Slip Opencast Site

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish his inspector's report on the public inquiry held last July into the British Coal opencast executive's application to extend the Parc Slip opencast site at Cefn Cribwr towards Kenfig hill.

Mr. David Hunt: The inspector's report will be published when my decision letter on the planning appeal is issued. The case is currently receiving consideration and a decision will be issued as soon as possible.

Minerals Planning Guidance 3

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the review he is undertaking of minerals planning guidance 3.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As part of the monitoring of minerals planning guidance Note 3, views were sought on how well the guidelines were operating and whether they had created any problems. The responses of consultees are currently being evaluated and, in the light of the results of that evaluation, we shall consider whether there is a need for any revision of minerals planning guidance note 3. A decision will be announced as soon as possible.

National Opera House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a copy of the report he commissioned into the engineering and financial feasibility of the proposed new home in Cardiff bay for the Welsh national opera house.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 12 June 1992]: I hope to do so shortly.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Lignite Resources

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the quality and extent of lignite resources confirmed in the Ballymoney area of Co. Antrim.

Mr. Atkins: Consultants have, on behalf of the Department of Economic Development, carried out an initial study which estimated a lignite resource at Ballymoney of almost 350 million tonnes. The licensee has carried out more extensive prospecting work and estimates the total resource to exceed 600 million tonnes. In general terms, lignite has an energy value approximately one third of that of hard coal. Precise details on the quality of the Ballymoney resource are commercially confidential.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils are at each of (a) the primary and (b) secondary schools in the constituency of Newry and Armagh in (i) the maintained, (ii) the controlled and (iii) the integrated sectors of education.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Metal-framed Windows

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of the report by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive into the replacement of metal-framed windows and the fairness of the programme in the various parts of the Province.

Mr. Atkins: I am advised by the chairman of the Housing Executive that the executive is carrying out a survey into the extent of the replacement of metal windows over the last three years. The survey will also list the stock which still has metal windows. It is intended to provide a data base which will be kept updated as renovation schemes are completed and dwellings sold or demolished. Although this is an internal executive survey, I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman with the results when the work is completed in a few weeks.

Housing Grants

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 109, what was the basis for the decision at his Office to refuse to accept all new preliminary applications after 28 February for housing grants other than applications for special grants and grants dealing with statutory notices; and when it is expected that the new renovation grants scheme will be introduced.

Mr. Atkins: It is anticipated that the new renovation grant scheme will come into operation on 1 October 1992. The suspension of the acceptance of new preliminary applications for grant is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but the chairman has advised me that the decision was taken to enable those preliminary applications already in the pipeline to be processed to formal application stage, where possible, before the introduction of the new legislation, since from that date the executive will be statutorily debarred from accepting formal applications under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1983. Grant applications approved or processed to the formal stage by that date can be paid under the 1983 order because transitional arrangements for these have been included in the proposed new legislation. The executive was conscious that, had it continued to accept preliminary applications it would have done so in the knowledge that applicants who may have incurred expenditure would not have been able to progress their applications to formal application stage by October 1992.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Relocation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what future plans he has to relocate civil service posts from the south-east of England to elsewhere in the United Kingdom; what departments and how many staff will be affected; what is their expected relocation; and if he will will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The table lists, with likely timings, the plans which Departments and agencies have announced for relocations or locations away from the south-east which have still to be implemented or completed.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to change the premium bond prize scheme when the national lottery is introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I have no present plans to change the existing premium bond prize scheme.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

Mr. Portillo: Following the publication of "Competing for Quality", a review of the scope for market testing services in the Treasury has been undertaken and an announcement about the target for market testing in 1992-93 will be made shortly.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the purpose of the meeting between Treasury officials and Mr. Jerry Walters from Messrs. Simmonds and Simmonds concerning BCCI on 10 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: A delegation including Mr. Jerry Walters attended a meeting at the Treasury on 10 June to discuss European directives. BCCI was not raised.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's total income, to date, from North sea oil since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: Total revenues to the Exchequer from the North sea since 1979-80 have been £71 billion.

Lloyd's Underwriters

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total estimated value of the tax changes provided in the Lloyd's Underwriters (Tax) (1989-90) Regulations 1992, SI 1992 No. 511 which came into force on 28 March; what consultations were held with which parties prior to laying the regulations on 6 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The regulations involve no change in underwriters' tax liabilities or retrospective tax concessions. They renew for a further year the improved administrative arrangements, introduced last year, whereby the underwriter's agent is made responsible for accounting for tax due at the basic rate on the underwriter's profits. Before their introduction in 1991, these new arrangements were discussed with Lloyd's.

Charitable Status

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the loss to tax revenue if the governing bodies of amateur sport were to be granted charitable status.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that the information requested is not available. Charities enjoy exemption from tax only on income which is applied to charitable purposes, or where it arises as part of the exercise of a primary purpose of the charity or from a trade carried out by the beneficiaries of the charity. Sport is not a charitable activity.

Stamp Duty

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to public funds hitherto of the provisions of the Stamp Duty (Temporary Provisions) Act 1992.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of the increase in the stamp duty threshold from £30,000 to £250,000 for eight months from 20 December 1991 will be about £400 million—£110 million in 1991-92 and £290 million in 1992-93.

Agencies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidance the Treasury is providing on the setting of targets for executive agencies.

Mr. Portillo: A booklet prepared by HM Treasury entitled "Executive Agencies: A Guide to Setting Targets and Measuring Performance" is today published by HMSO. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

A draft of this guide was printed in the report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on the "next steps" initiative, in July 1991 (No. 496).

The guide describes targets for financial performance, quality, efficiency, and other aspects of performance, and makes suggestions on how to assess the results. Although primarily addressed to advisers in Government Departments, it will be of interest to managers in all the public services, and to all who are concerned with improving the performance of their organisations in accordance with the citizens charter.

VAT

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list those commodities and services currently rated for VAT (a) at zero and (b) at a level below the maximum and indicate which of those would be enshrined or protected by the terms of the Maastricht treaty;

(2) if he will list those commodities and services currently rated for VAT (a) at zero and (b) at a level below the maximum and indicate which of those would be enshrined or protected by the terms of the draft European directive on VAT.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 15 June 1992]: Those goods and services which are currently zero-rated for VAT are as follows. There is no reduced rate category in the United Kingdom.

Food, including animal feeding stuffs (i)
Sewerage services and water (ii)
Books, booklets, pamphlets and leaflets, newspapers, journals and periodicals, sheet music, maps, charts and topographical plans.
Talking books for the blind and handicapped and wireless sets for the blind.
Fuel and power (ii)
Construction of buildings (iii)
Reconstruction of protected buildings
International services
Transport (iv)
Residential caravans and houseboats (v)
Gold (vi)
Bank notes.
Drugs, medicines, aids for the handicapped.
Certain supplies connected with imports and exports to overseas bodies in connection with international collaboration on defence projects.
Certain supplies made by or to charities.
Young children's clothing and footwear.
Protective boots and helmets.

Notes

(i) excludes the supply of food in the course of catering and certain items such as confectionery, crisps and packaged pet food.
(ii) zero-rating applies to domestic use only.
(iii) excludes commercial buildings.
(iv) excludes the supply of ships and aircraft used for recreation or pleasure.
(v) excludes holiday accommodation.
(vi) zero-rating applies to transactions between central banks and the London Gold Market.

The latest text of the EC draft directive on the approximation of VAT rates contains provision for member states which as at 1 January 1991 applied a lower rate, including zero-rates, than the minimum laid down for the reduced rate, in accordance with Community law then in force, to retain those rates.

VAT rates are not affected by the Maastricht treaty.

HEALTH

Children Act 1989

10. Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the operation of the Children Act 1989, since its implementation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There has been a positive and enthusiastic response to the Act from those in the statutory and voluntary sector. The Children Act is the most important step forward this century in the protection afforded vulnerable children in our society. The Act is operating well. At the end of this year I shall be submitting a report to Parliament on the first year of the Act in operation.

Elderly People

11. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance on good practice she gives hospitals and health authorities on the provision of long-term hospital accommodation for the elderly.

Mr. Sackville: We made it clear in "Caring for People" that we expect health authorities to purchase continuous residential health care for those highly dependent elderly people who need it. We believe that such care is best provided in small, homely units in the community.

Health Promotion

13. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations she has received regarding the proposed White Paper on health promotion.

Dr. Mawhinney: About 2,100 responses have now been received in response to the "Health of the Nation" Green Paper. We welcome this evidence of the very wide interest in the Government's initiative to improve health. We intend to publish our White Paper shortly.

Residential Care

14. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last met representatives of the Social Care Association to discuss residential care.

Mr. Yeo: We last met representatives of the Social Care Association in October 1990. Officials are in regular touch with the association.

17. Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the resources to be transferred to local authorities for funding residential care.

Mr. Yeo: We are committed to providing adequate resources to enable local authorities to meet their new community care responsibilities. Decisions on the transfer and the overall level of resources required will be taken in the context of this year's local government expenditure survey.

Air Ambulance Service (Cornwall)

15. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial support her Department has given to the Cornwall first air ambulance service.

Mr. Sackville: The capital and running costs of Cornwall air ambulance service are provided by charitable donations. The paramedical services are provided by the Cornwall Community Healthcare Trust.

Aids

16. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the United Kingdom is taking through the World Health Organisation and the European Community to combat the global spread of AIDS.

Mr. Yeo: The United Kingdom has been an active supporter of the World Health Organisation's global programme on AIDS since its inception and is currently the third largest donor. As a member state of the European Community, we provide support for the various EC AIDS initiatives, namely the "Europe against AIDS" programme, the AIDS task force and the EC biomedical and health research programme, which has a substantial AIDS component. The United Kingdom participates in the development of advice for the Council of Health Ministers through the ad hoc group on AIDS. We provide support for the European Community's AIDS progamme for developing countries through our contribution to the European Development Fund and the Community budget.

Hospital Trusts

18. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals or units expressed an interest in acquiring NHS trust status (a) for April 1991, (b) for April 1992 and (c) for April 1993; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of 83 hospitals and units expressed an interest in becoming NHS trusts from 1991, 66 applied and 57 were established. In the following year 130 expressed interest, 110 applied and 103 were established. The current position for the third wave of applications is that 154 hospitals and units have expressed an interest in becoming NHS trusts from April 1993 and 151 have so far applied. This is more than in either of the first two waves. This shows that staff and managers in the NHS increasingly are seeing trusts as the best way to improve services for patients.

27. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications she has received for hospital trust status; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing), earlier today.

28. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in Shropshire towards practice budgets for doctors and trust status for hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are currently five GP fund holders in Shropshire serving 12·7 per cent. of the population. A further four practices have applied for fund-holding status from April 1993, and if successful, 23 per cent. of the population of Shropshire will then be served by GP fund holders.

We have received two formal applications for trust status from units in Shropshire: one from the Princess Royal hospital in Telford; and one from Shropshire mental health services. These applications are now out for formal public consultation.

Health Authorities, Cumbria

19. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to alter the boundaries of the three district health authorities in Cumbria.

Mr. Sackville: None at present. Northern regional health authority, together with its district health authorities (DHAs) and family health services authorities are currently considering the best way to develop DHAs' central role in purchasing health care on behalf of their residents; including the possibility of joint working with neighbouring authorities.

Malpractice and Fraud

20. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce a code of practice designed to protect the position of those NHS employees who draw attention to malpractice and fraud; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is important that all NHS staff should express professional concerns about health service issues to their managers. Employing authorities need to acknowledge this duty, but they must also retain the right to take action in cases of improper disclosure of confidential material, such as personal patient information. Staff aggrieved by any disciplinary action taken by their employer have recourse to established grievances procedures.

Private Health Care

21. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures she has for the number of persons making private health care arrangements in west Cumbria.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Building Projects

22. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service building projects have been completed in England since 1979; and how many are under way.

Dr. Mawhinney: More than 600 capital schemes, each costing more than £1 million, have been completed in the national health service since 1979. A further 400 such schemes are in various stages of planning, design and construction, of which 105 are currently under construction.

Abortion

23. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many late abortions of pre-born children occurred after 18 weeks gestation during the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: There were 5,061 abortions over 18 weeks notified under the Abortion Act 1967 in England and Wales in the period 1 October 1990 to 31 September 1991, 2·8 per cent. of the total number.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many sterilisation and abortion operations have been performed on mentally disabled women in the last 12 months for which figures are available; what criteria were used in arriving at these decisions; and how many girls, under the age of 16 years, have been sterilised in the last 12 months for which figures are available, and on what grounds.

Mr. Sackville: Information about the number of sterilisation operations is not available in the form requested. Details of the medical condition recorded on abortion notification forms—including unspecified mental retardation—are given in table 27 of the 1990 "Abortion Statistics" (Series AB No. 17) published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, a copy of which is available in the Library. The criteria for reaching decisions vary from case to case and can involve relatives and carers, and possibly reference to the courts. The national health service "Hospital Episode Statistics" show that only one female sterilisation operation was performed on a patient under the age of 16 in England in 1990-91.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are issued to health authorities concerning the use of amniocentesis and chorionic villus sampling tests; how many tests were made under each procedure in the last year for which figures are available; how many pregnancies ended in spontaneous abortions following testing; how many ended in clinical abortions; how many babies born after being tested by CVS were discovered to have a physical or mental handicap; what evidence she has of links between the CVS test and disability; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Guidelines to providers of maternity services on the use of tests for fetal abnormalities are contained in the first report of the Maternity Services Advisory Committee: "Maternity Care in Action—Antenatal Care", at paragraph 4.27. Copies are available in the Library. Information on the number of tests carried out under each procedure is not held centrally.

Information on the number of pregnancies which end in miscarriage following testing is not held centrally. Studies have indicated that amniocentesis is associated with miscarriage in one or two cases in every 200 where the procedure is used. It is more difficult to estimate the level of the association between miscarriage and chorionic villus sampling (CVS), because studies are unable to identify women who would have miscarried among those who request and have termination of pregnancy following a diagnosis of cytogenic abnormality. A recent randomised controlled trial carried out by the Medical Research Council compared CVS with amniocentesis and found that a woman undergoing CVS has a one in 20 less chance of a successful outcome to her pregnancy than a woman undergoing amniocentesis in the second trimester of pregnancy.

Information on the number of pregnancies which ended in a termination following testing is not held centrally. It is likely that the majority of such terminations would be for chromosomal abnormality in the fetus, and in 1990 this condition was reported in 273 terminations (England and Wales).

Following reports of a possible association between the use of CVS and the occurrence of limb reduction defects, an investigation was made by the European registration of congenital anomalies and twins (EUROCAT) into seven of its registries, covering 600,000 births. The investigation did not demonstrate a significantly increased risk associated with exposure to CVS in the areas covered by these seven registries.

We are not aware of any evidence linking CVS with mental handicap.

Community Care

24. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she next expects to meet representatives of local authorities to discuss the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Mr. Yeo: We have regular and constructive meetings with representatives of the local authority associations at which we discuss many aspects of social services provision including the implementation of our community care policy. We are next due to meet on 1 July.

Waiting Lists

25. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patients are waiting longer than a year for treatment; and what was the comparable number (a) in March 1979 and (b) in March 1991.

Mr. Sackville: Provisional figures for 31 March 1992 are given in the table. These show that between March 1979 and March 1992 the total number of in-patients waiting over a year fell by 63 per cent.

In-patients waiting over 1 year

	Number waiting
March 1979	185,195
March 1991	170,065
March 1992	[1]68,650

[1] Based on provisional figures from regional health authorities.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will arrange to collect centrally statistics on (a) first out-patient waiting lists, (b) in-patient 12 to 24 month waiting lists and (c) in-patient 0 to 12-month waiting lists.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for out-patient waiting times are not collected centrally, but all health authorities are required under the patients charter to publish information on the local standards they have set for waiting times for first out-patient appointments and on performance against these targets. The Department regularly publishes statistical bulletins which include the numbers of people waiting for in-patient and day case hospital treatment in the 0 to 12 and 12 to 24 month categories. The most recent information for the six months to September 1991 was published on 4 June. For provisional figures covering the period up to 30 April 1992, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 10 June at columns 219-20.

Residential Homes

26. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has any proposals to change the current arrangements for the monitoring and inspection of private care or nursing homes.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) earlier today.

Maternity Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of home confinements as a percentage of all live births in each NHS region since 1987.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table.

Adoptions

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations were made to the Romanian Committee for adoptions by the United Kingdom Government concerning the conditions on age of prospective adoptive parents incorporated in the agreement signed by the Department of Health on 19 March.

Mr. Yeo: The age of prospective adopting parents seeking to adopt a child from Romania was one of more than 40 conditions contained in the draft agreement prepared by the Romanian Committee for Adoptions in January this year. They were the subject of detailed negotiations with the committee before the agreement was signed on 19 March 1992.

Discussions between the Department of Health, acting on behalf of the United Kingdom health departments, and the Romanian Committee for Adoptions took place between January and March prior to a team of officials from the Department of Health visiting Romania and continuing negotiations direct with the committee.

The conditions contained in the agreement with the United Kingdom are essentially the same as for the signatories of 11 other countries. Without this agreement in place, prospective adopters are unable to apply to adopt a Romanian child.

Dentistry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of people aged (a) 18 years and below and (b) over 19 years who received out-patient dental treatment from the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale district health authority in each year from 1985, and from Burnley Health Care since its establishment as an NHS trust.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. W. Ashworth, chairman, Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority and Mr. J. H. C. Rawson, chairman, Burnley health care NHS trust for details.

Finance

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been allocated in joint finance money by regional health authorities in England; and what proportion has been spent on projects for people with learning disabilities.

Mr. Yeo: Allocations to regional health authorities in England for joint finance total £134·696 million in 1992-93. Information is not collected centrally on spending by client group.

Euthanasia

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the guidance she gives to health authorities about the receipt from patients of advance directives commissioning their killing by euthanasia administered by doctors and nurses.

Mr. Sackville: We have issued no guidance to health authorities on such directives. Patients are fully entitled to make known in advance their views on possible future medical treatment. Any health professional, however, whilst taking account of the patient's wishes, is bound by the law, and cannot be required to take any action which conflicts with this.

South Yorkshire Ambulance Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received and what data she has in her possession concerning delays in (a) reception of 999 calls at the headquarters of the South Yorkshire ambulance service, (b) the dispatch of emergency calls from that headquarters and (c) the arrival of ambulance at an emergency incident; and what were the comparative figures for (i) 24 months, (ii) 36 months and (iii) 48 months ago.

Mr. Sackville: No recent representations have been received about the performance of the service.

Call logging equipment in use at service headquarters during the last 18 months has shown that on average, 999 calls coming into service control take approximately five seconds to be answered.

The latest activation and response time figures are given in the tables.

War Pensioners

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes there have been since 1990 in the guidance given by her Department on priority treatment for war pensioners; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: There have been no changes. New guidance will be issued in the near future.

Disability

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people claiming disability working allowance also receive health benefits; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available.

Diabetes

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether Reflolux meters for monitoring blood count in the treatment of diabetics are available on prescription.

Dr. Mawhinney: A meter may be provided through the hospital service if the consultant in charge of the patient's care considers it clinically necessary. Meters are not available on prescription.

Liver Transplants

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual cost of liver transplantation in the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: In the year ending 31 March 1992 expenditure on liver transplantation and associated follow-up services amounted to £13·7 million.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the provision for liver transplantation in the national health service; and what information she has on the number of patients waiting for, and in the convalescent period after, such transplants and the estimated distances such patients have to travel for treatment.

Mr. Sackville: The number of liver transplants performed in the United Kingdom rose from 21 in 1982 to 419 in 1991. A total of 64 patients were reported to be awaiting liver transplants at 30 April 1992. There are no figures held centrally on the numbers of people in convalescence following liver transplants.

Information on the distances patients have to travel for transplant treatment is not collected centrally. There are six designated centres where liver transplants are performed. Two of the hospitals are in London; the others are in Cambridge, Birmingham, Leeds and Newcastle. The provision of designated liver transplant centres is kept under constant review.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many answers from her Department to parliamentary questions in (a) the current and (b) the last session of Parliament hon. Members have been advised to contact the chairman of a district health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Eleven so far in this Session and 33 in the 1991-92 Session.

NHS Finance

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to collect centrally information on the amount of over or under-spending and the throughput of patients in each of the last five years of major general hospitals in each region.

Mr. Sackville: There are no current plans to require this information to be collected centrally.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) the amount of over and under-spending in each of the last five years and (b) the throughput of patients over each of the last five years in the Warrington health authority.

Mr. Sackville: The information about over and under spending is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. Hannah, the chairman of Warrington health authority, for details.

The information requested on throughput of patients is given in the table.

Throughput of patients (patients treated per available bed): Warrington Health Authority

	Cases treated	Available beds	Throughput

1987-88	[1]30,330	2,180	14

[1] The figures for 1986/1987-88 have been converted from the old measurement of discharges and deaths into the present measurement of finished consultant episodes. During 1988-89, information on patient cases treated was collected on both bases to facilitate this conversion.

[2] The figures for 1990-91 are provisional.

Charitable Fund Raising

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will consider introducing guidelines for hospital trust charitable fund-raising organisations to avoid them competing for business with charitable fund raising for hospices.

Mr. Sackville: It is not for the Government to direct trustees of hospitals in their fund-raising ventures. We believe that the detail of fund-raising events are best decided at local level in the light of local needs and priorities.

Child Care

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make money available to local authorities so that schools can provide pre-school and after-school care for children of working parents.

Mr. Yeo: It is inappropriate to use public funds to help all parents pay for day care services for their children. Public funds should be targeted on children in need.

Multiple Sclerosis

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to resite the Association for Research into Multiple Sclerosis following the proposed closure of the Central Middlesex hospital; and if she will take account of the needs of multiple sclerosis sufferers at present treated there.

Mr. Sackville: I am not aware of any proposals to close Central Middlesex hospital.

The hospital provides accommodation and other assistance to the charity Action Research into Multiple Sclerosis. I understand that the charity's centre at the hospital has run into serious financial problems, putting at risk the therapy and diagnostic services it has been providing for between 400 and 500 patients.

The Department of Health agreed in May to provide £75,000 to the Central Middlesex hospital to avoid disruption of treatment for patients.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has any plans to introduce screening for human T-cell leukaemia in the blood transfusion service.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 15 June 1992 at columns 415-16.

TRANSPORT

M25

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to complete his consultations and to publish his proposals for improving the M25 motorway between junctions 11 and 16.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department announced its plans for improving the M25 last September. The next step will be a public exhibition of its proposals for increasing the capacity of the M25 beyond dual four lanes between junction 12 to 15. Work on widening the motorway to dual four lanes between junctions 15 and 16 is expected to start in the autumn. Consultants have not yet been appointed to investigate options for providing additional capacity between junctions 11 and 12.

Road Safety Schemes

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what road safety schemes his Department is currently supporting; and how much funding is allocated to these schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A total of £31 million was earmarked for local safety schemes in the 1991-92 local roads capital settlement. A total of £43 million has been provided for this purpose in 1992-93. Information on individual schemes executed by local highway authorities using the funds is not readily available, but the average cost of a local safety scheme is about £10,000.

The Department of Transport spent £10 million on about 300 safety schemes on its trunk roads in 1991-92. That rate of expenditure is expected to continue in 1992-93.

Cars

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he has received on the hazards of electric windows in cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have reports of two cases of electric windows in vehicles causing fatalities to children over the past six years, including the recent tragedy. Both accidents were caused by the children inadvertently actuating switches. The Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders has now asked its members to review their designs and will shortly be meeting to discuss further action. I have asked to be kept informed of the outcome of these discussions. The vehicle inspectorate has also now examined the car involved in the recent tragedy, to determine whether there were any defects in the particular vehicle. It will shortly be reporting its findings to me.

Goods Vehicle Drivers

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many light goods vehicle drivers have been unable to follow their employment as a result of the revocation or suspension of their licences by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency medical branch; and if he will introduce a proper compensation scheme for such drivers for their loss of income during the suspension or revocation period.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No information is available to the Department on the number of LGV drivers who have been unable to follow their employment as a result of revocation of their licences on medical grounds by the DVLA.

Drivers have a right of appeal through the magistrates courts against a decision to revoke their licence. If compensation is awarded, the Department has a legal obligation to pay. Proven cases of maladministration may justify an ex gratia compensation payment.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many LGV drivers have had their licences revoked or suspended in each year since 1988 for (a) heart problems, (b) epilepsy and (c) other medical conditions; how many of these drivers have subsequently had their licences restored; and what is the average time period involved.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Information on the number of LGV drivers who have had their licences revoked on medical grounds is available only from September 1991. Since that date, 541 drivers have had their licences revoked because of heart problems, 97 because of epilepsy and 577 because of other medical conditions.

Five LGV drivers have had their licences restored following appeal to the courts since April 1991, the cases taking between one and five months to resolve.

Commuters

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to institute a London travel survey in order to ascertain the main reasons for commuters travelling in and out of London at particular times; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: A major survey of travel in London was conducted during 1991—the London area transport survey. This will provide comprehensive information on journey purposes and times for each mode of travel. For respondents living in the area bounded by the M25 and who usually arrive at work between 8 am and 9.30 am, the survey also asked whether they could change their hours to avoid travelling during the peak period. The results of the survey will be available by summer 1993.

In addition, as part of the London road pricing research programme, the Department intends to commission a small survey to assess how motorists, including commuters, would adjust their times of travel in response to charges. The survey is likely to take place this summer.

A10

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the latest position as regards the consultation study of Travers-Morgan Associates on the A10 Hoddesdon-Cambridge section as outlined in "Roads to Prosperity."

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is currently awaiting the consultant's report and recommendations. We expect them shortly.

A1

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether tenders have been received for works to the A1 to upgrade to motorway standard between Wetherby and Boroughbridge; and what is the programme of works.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. The necessary preparatory works are not yet sufficiently advanced to enable tenders to be invited.

The proposed upgrading of the A1 to a motorway along the stretch in question is covered by two schemes in the roads programme. The first and more advanced is the Walshford to Dishforth scheme which was taken to public inquiry in March 1992. Subject to the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures, and the availability of funds, tenders could be invited next year. The other is the Wetherby to Walshford scheme for which the preferred route was announced in September 1991. The next stage is publication of draft orders under the Highways Act 1980.

A40

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the A40 through Cheltenham to be detrunked; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The time scale for the detrunking of the A40 in Cheltenham is dependent on the Department's proposals to provide a southerly alternative trunk road route. This consists of Brockworth bypass on the A417, including a new junction with the M5, together with any improvements that may be required to bring the A436 from Shipton Solers to Air Balloon up to a trunk road standard.

Given a favourable outcome from the recent public inquiry, and subject to the continuing availability of funds, the construction of Brockworth bypass might be completed by the mid-1990s. A feasibility study into the improvements necessary on the A436 route will be undertaken shortly. A decision on detrunking the A40 in Cheltenham will be made in the light of that.

Severn Crossing

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when a second Severn river crossing will be completed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The second Severn crossing is due to be completed in spring 1996.

Railway Passenger Services

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals for railway passenger services franchising as they relate to the Uckfield service.

Mr. Freeman: Our proposals are for the private sector progressively to take over the operation of passenger services under franchises, including services on the Uckfield line, while British Rail will retain responsibility for track and signalling. We intend to publish a White Paper shortly which will set out our proposals in more detail.

York Ring Road

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish the outline plans for the dualling of the northern section of the York outer ring road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I expect outline plans to be published later this year showing proposals for the improvement of the trunk road section of the York northern bypass, between the A19 of Rawcliffe and the A64 at Hopgrove. That will follow the completion of work carried out by the appointed consulting engineer on alternative solutions to the problems on that stretch of road.

Noise Insulation

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report of the interdepartmental committee which is considering the extension of the noise insulation scheme in the vicinity of civilian airports to schools, hospitals and other institutions.

Mr. Norris: I still await the report from the working group led by my Department. Further detailed consultation at official level is required, and is taking longer than expected. I hope that the report can be finalised within the next few months.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the terms of reference and the composition of the interdepartmental committee which is considering the extension of the noise insulation scheme in the vicinity of civilian airports to schools, hospitals and other institutions.

Mr. Norris: There are no "terms of reference" as such. The Department of Transport agreed to investigate the costs and practicability of a scheme for insulting schools and hospitals and to report back. It was decided that the report should be submitted to the Department of Transport and the Ministry of Defence for ministerial decision. The group comprises representatives from the highways and civil aviation divisions of the Department of Transport, and from the Department of the Environment, the Ministry of Defence, the Department of Education, the Department of Health and the Treasury.

Driving Licences

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the cost of obtaining a medical examination was taken into account in raising the fee for a heavy goods vehicle driving licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Large goods and passenger-carrying vehicle licence fees are set to recover the administrative costs of licence issue. No account is taken of the cost of obtaining the medical report required by law at initial application for or subsequent renewal of a licence.

Hazardous Chemicals

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has made to the European Commission to ensure that the Hazchem system of marking hazardous substances is retained for all transportation of these substances in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 12 June 1992 at column 299.

Motorway Construction

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average cost of providing one kilometre of motorway in a rural area, broken down into (a) cost of land purchase and (b) cost of construction.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 11 June 1992]: Construction costs of roads vary substantially depending on factors such as location and the need for structures. In view of that, the Department does not prepare information on the average cost of road construction per kilometre. "Trunk Roads: England into the 1990s" contains full details, including estimated works costs, of all schemes in the trunk road programme.

Motor Cycles

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many EEC member states have adopted stage 1 noise limits under the relevant noise limits directive for motor cycles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 15 June 1992]: Our understanding is that all member states have taken legislative or administrative action to implement the stage I noise limits in EC directive 87/56.

A12

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the role of his Department's officials who attended the Suffolk county and Waveney district joint members' and officers' meeting in Lowestoft on 9 June about the A12 proposals within Lowestoft; and what information the officials were to deliver to the meeting about timing.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 15 June 1992]: The meeting was one of a series of regular exchanges of information and views on transport issues. The Department's officials were able to report that public consultation on alternative routes for the improved Pakefield to Kessingland section of the A12, the Lowestoft relief road scheme, was planned for later this year.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the timing of consultation, design and building he now expects to take place in fulfilment of commitments in the White Paper "Roads to Prosperity" for the A12 in Waveney, from Blythburgh to Kessingland, from Kessingland to Bloodmoor road, and from Bloodmoor road to Pleasurewood; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are his plans for keeping the hon. Member for Waveney informed about changes on planning, timing, consultation and construction he is proposing in the dualling of the A12 from Ipswich to Great Yarmouth since the publication of the White Paper, "Roads to Prosperity", and since statements made in the last Parliament by his predecessor.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 15 June 1992]: Schemes to improve the A12 are at different stages in their development. The present programme for consultation is:

Blythburgh to south of Wrentham	late 1993
South of Wrentham to Kessingland	late 1992
Lowestoft inner relief road
Kessingland to Bloodmoor road section	late 1992

A preferred route was announced for the Bloodmoor road to Pleasurewood section of Lowestoft inner relief road in November 1990.

The timing of subsequent stages will depend on the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and the availability of funds.

The hon. Member will be informed as a matter of course at the key stages of public consultation, order publication, public inquiry, when the decision is announced following the inquiry and when construction is due to start.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Benefits

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement concerning delays in the introduction of the new disability living allowance and the financial difficulties caused to those people who previously claimed disability benefit.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many applications for disability living allowance (a) have been referred for a medical examination by the adjudication officer in order to assess the claim and (b) have included a request from the claimant for a medical examination;

(2) what was the number of applications received by his Department for disability living allowance where the form was completed through the benefits inquiry line completion service; and what was the number and percentage of these resulting in an award of (a) higher-rate care component, (b) middle-rate care component, (c) lower-rate care component, (d) higher-rate mobility component and (e) lower-rate mobility component; and how many were refused.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Widows

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a widow's payment available to women widowed prior to 11 April 1988.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so. The widow's payment of £1,000 replaced the widow's allowance from 11 April 1988. To pay widow's payment to those widows who received widow's allowance prior to April 1988 would be double provision.

Benefits, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list each of the benefits for which his Department is responsible in the Doncaster area during the current year, giving in each case (a) the total number receiving the benefit and (b) the cost in a full year of that benefit; and if he will give comparative figures for (i) 24 months, (ii) 36 months and (iii) 48 months ago.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

Miss Widdecombe: Discussions are presently taking place with the efficiency unit at the Cabinet Office regarding proposals put forward by the Department. An announcement will be made in due course.

Invalidity Benefit

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy that invalidity benefit should be payable up to the same age for men and women.

Mr. Scott: The age limits for invalidity benefit coincide with the age up to which people can earn increments to their retirement pensions. This is 64 for women and 69 for men.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the differential rate of percentage increases of national insurance benefits, including invalidity benefit and retirement pensions and income support; and what assessment he has made of how many pensioners are worse off as a result of these differentials.

Miss Widdecombe: Our policy is to maintain the value in line with prices of retirement pension and other contributory benefits for people over state pension age. This April they received an increase in line with the retail prices index. Less well-off pensioners on income support received increases nearly 3 per cent. higher than this. All pensioners therefore benefited from the uprating.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the rule that if claimants are in receipt of the higher rate of income support, because of a previous entitlement to invalidity benefit, and if they lose that right to income support because of a rise in invalidity benefit, their claim is deemed to be interrupted and they lose any entitlement to the higher rate of income support, even though the income support may rise and they may again be entitled to claim it.

Mr. Burt: A person who is in receipt of invalidity benefit and makes a claim for income support will be eligible for the disability premium or higher pensioner premium—depending on age—whether or not they have been entitled to income support and eligible for the premium in the past. The hon. Member may wish to write to me if she has an individual case in mind.

Social Fund

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will show the social fund budgets for all offices in the Leeds metropolitan district for grants and loans for each year since 1988 both at real prices and at 1992 prices showing the percentage increase or decrease on the 1988 allocation.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Claims (Processing)

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what investigations he has made of the causes of the length of time taken to process claims for attendance allowance and disability living allowance; and what plans he has to increase the funding of the Benefits Agency in order to reduce the time taken.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Maxwell Group

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what steps he proposes to take to keep the House informed of progress over the state of the Maxwell pension funds; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what target he has set for a timetable for the money removed from the Maxwell pension funds to be restored; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not yet clear how much of the missing pension fund assets will eventually be recoverable by the trustees. We have established a special unit to work alongside trustees and others seeking to secure the return of assets, and the unit will do all it can to help speed up this process. We shall keep hon. Members fully informed of developments.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of households in Scotland are dependent on housing benefit; and how this has changed since the current system of housing benefit was introduced.

Mr. Burt: The most recent estimate, for May 1990, is that 28 per cent. of households in Scotland receive some of their income from housing benefit (rent rebates and allowances). The corresponding figures for 1988 and 1989 are 29 per cent. and 28 per cent. respectively.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

BBC World Service

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis his Department decides the languages and areas in which the BBC World Service should be funded to broadcast.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The languages and areas in which the BBC World Service broadcasts are regularly reviewed jointly by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the World Service in the light of foreign policy objectives. Decisions are based on the political significance of a country or region and the extent of British and wider western interests; the degree of openness in a society and of its people's access to objective news; the range of means available, besides broadcasting, to project Britain and British views; and in the case of existing language services, the size and profile of their audiences, their impact and influence, and their importance to bilateral relations.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reasons his Department has decided not to fund BBC World Service broadcasts in Japanese.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following a joint FCO/BBC world service review of broadcasting output in 1990, it was agreed to increase output in Russian, Mandarin and Vietnamese, as well as English programmes to a number of regions, and to end broadcasts in Japanese and Malay for which audiences were small and declining. Both services ceased at the end of March 1991. World Service programmes in English continue to both areas.

United Nations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current level of funding for the United Nations; by what date the United Kingdom was requested by the United Nations secretariat to pay dues to the United Nations for peacekeeping operations in 1992; on what date those dues were paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Member states' contributions to the 1992 United Nations regular budget will total £593,179,000, of which the United Kingdom share will be £28,260,695.

We estimate that the United Kingdom's assessed contributions to the United Nations for current peacekeeping operations for the United Kingdom financial year 1992-93 will total £70 million. As at today's date we had been asked to pay $81,178,625 towards those costs, and had paid $41,660,134. The discrepancy between the two amounts arises from an assessment in respect of UNTAC—the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia—which we have received but which has not yet fallen due. We aim to make all our payments in accordance with United Nations financial regulation 5.4, which states: "contributions shall be considered due and payable within 30 days (of receipt of the Letter of Assessment)".

Bahrain

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Bahrain Government about human rights violations; and what meetings he has had with representatives of the Bahrain Government to discuss the treatment of political prisoners in Bahrain.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We keep a close watch on human rights issues world-wide and raise the subject with individual Governments when necessary. The Gulf states, including Bahrain, are well aware of the importance that we attach to the observance of international human rights standards throughout the world.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many certificates have been issued under section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I am aware of none so far as the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is concerned.

Entertainment Budget

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was his entertainment budget for 1991.

Mr. Goodlad: Expenditure by both wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on entertainment in financial year 1991-92 is estimated at £7,102,000.

That figure includes the grant in aid to the Government hospitality fund, which meets the cost of ministerial entertainment and guest-of-Government visits for all Government Departments, and the cost of other official entertainment by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and by diplomatic missions overseas.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

Mr. Goodlad: We have considered a number of proposals for market testing arising from separate studies carried out on behalf of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Overseas Development Administration by Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte. A statement setting out areas of activity to be market-tested will be made once these proposals have been finalised.

Entry Applications

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the current lists of applicants in each of the queues for (a) settlement and (b) visits at (i) Bombay, (ii) Dacca, (iii) New Delhi, (iv) Islemat, (v) Karachi, (vi) Nairobi and (vii) Dar-es-Salaam.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As at 30 April 1992., the number of applicants in the queues were:

Settlement	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4	Total
Bombay	0	305	393	219	917

Karachi	6	87	20	7	120

There are no queues in Nairobi or Dar-Es-Salaam.

Settlement queues are organised as follows:

Q2 All spouses, and all children under 18 years.
Q3 Fiancé(é)s and others applying for the first time for resettlement.
Q4 Re-applicants.

Visits

During periods of seasonally high demand applicants for visit visas in Islamabad requiring a full interview can expect to wait up to five days. Elsewhere they are dealt with on day of application.

EC Directives

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the title and subject matter of any directives or proposed directives from the European Community which have an impact on divorce law, abortion law, research on the human embryo, care of the dying, sexual consent, euthanasia, abortifacient drugs or related issues.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The only directives that have an impact upon any of these matters are provisions relating to abortifacient drugs, for which, as with other drugs, marketing and control are governed by a range of EC pharmaceutical directives. There are provisions in directive 65/65 EEC allowing member states to prohibit the marketing of abortifacient drugs under their own domestic laws if they wish.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress made by the United Nations special commission in Iraq in dismantling the Iraqi nuclear facilities at Ash Sharquat, Tarmiyah and Al-Atheer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the course of the eleventh and twelfth nuclear inspections, the United Nations special commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency made excellent progress in dismantling Iraqi nuclear facilities.

Details of the 11th inspection are contained in the Official Report, available in the House of Commons Library.

The report of the 12th inspection has not yet been published. When received, it will be placed in the Library of the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Glass Recycling

Mr. Cohen: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many bottles are used per annum in the precincts of the House; and what provision is made for glass recycling.

Mr. Beith: Bottle banking facilities, comprising two 1,100 litre capacity containers, are situated between Peers Court and State Officers Court. The containers are emptied daily by a contractor who sends the glass for recycling. Records are not kept of the total number of bottles used or disposed of each year.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what veal, other than that reared in Britain, is used by the House Catering Department.

Mr. Beith: The purchase of food and other consumables in the Refreshment Department is the responsibility of the Director of Catering Services, who will be glad to respond to any further inquiries from the hon. Gentleman.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training places have been available in the Easington constituency in the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information regarding the number of training places in Easington is not collected.

Since 1 October 1990, training in Easington has been the responsibility of County Durham training and enterprise council (TEC). At 29 March 1992, there were an estimated 4,400 people in training on youth training and an estimated 3,400 people in training on employment training in the County Durham TEC area.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds who are not in employment or education are not at present on youth training programmes in the Seaham and Peterlee areas.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the local careers service, which covers the Seaham and Peterlee areas, that there are currently 165 young people in the area who are registered with it as not in employment or education and who are not in youth training.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information she has on the skills being learned by employment training trainees.

Mr. McLoughlin: A range of management and evaluation information is collected by the Department about employment training (ET). Employment training is providing unemployed people with the skills necessary for them to get jobs in an increasingly competitive and challenging labour market.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what means she has to assess the quality of ET.

Mr. McLoughlin: Both nationally and locally the quality of ET is assessed through a number of different measures. These include the achievement of targets for positive outcomes and vocational qualifications; analysis of a range of performance indicators and other management information; and regular and ad hoc surveys and evaluation studies.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about vacant training in engineering places in Stockport because of the inability of the training and enterprise council to fund young people to take them up.

Mr. McLoughlin: Through youth training, 430 young people in the Stockport TEC area are being funded in engineering training. I am assured by the TEC that no other young people have expressed an interest in engineering training under youth training.

Pensioners

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people of state retirement pensionable age are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time employment in the Seaham and Peterlee area.

Mr. McLoughlin: The area most closely relating to Seaham and Peterlee for which data are available is the parliamentary constituency of Easington. The latest available figures are from the 1981 census of population. The number of people of state retirement pensionable age in the parliamentary constituency of Easington working full time in April 1981 was 158. Figures for part-time employment are not available. Figures for both full-time and part-time employees by age from the 1991 census of population are expected to be released by the end of October 1992.

Coal Mining

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the number of jobs directly and indirectly dependent upon the present size of the coal mining industry.

Mr. McLoughlin: In March 1992, the latest date for which estimates are available, there were 66,500 employees in employment in the coal extraction and manufacture of solid fuels industries in Great Britain. Jobs indirectly dependent upon the size of the coal mining industry are classified to those industries in which they occur—for example, the production and distribution industries—and are not separately identified.

Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of male unemployment in 1982 and at the latest available date in Alyn and Deeside.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the numbers claiming unemployment-related benefits for local areas such as parliamentary constituencies has only been available since June 1983.

In June 1983 there were 3,393 claimant unemployed men in the Alyn and Deeside parliamentary constituency. In April 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, the equivalent figure was 2,249.

These figures are on the unadjusted basis and are therefore affected by both seasonal influences and by changes in the coverage of the count.

Working Women

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will list the members of the working group looking at women's opportunities in the workplace and beyond announced on 20 May.

Mr. McLoughlin: The first members are as follows:

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she will publish the Health and Safety Executive's report "Sheep Dip 1990" by Dr. Carole Davidson and Mr. Brian Blatchford.

Mr. McLoughlin: A summary of the report is available and is in the Library. Further copies are available free of charge from the Health and Safety Executive's office at the National Agricultural Centre, Stoneleigh. The report itself is an internal working document and will not be published.

Health and Safety

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions have been brought under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1976 and associated legislation in Scotland in each year from 1982 to 1991; and how many inspection days it is estimated were saved as a result of all proceedings being conducted by the Crown prosecution service.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of complaints brought by the procurator fiscal in the sheriff court in Scotland under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and associated legislation by HSE's inspectorates and by local authorities for the period 1 January 1982 to 31 March 1991 is given in the table. The information required to estimate the figure requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, whether or not an inspector personally conducts proceedings, he or she has to prepare a case and may also appear as a witness.

Number of complaints initiated in Scotland by HSE inspectorates and local authorities 1982-91

Earnings

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will show average earnings per week for (a) males, (b) females and (c) in total for (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all both (1) with and without overtime and (2) for each region and for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information for the regions of England and for Wales, Scotland and Great Britain can be found in tables 12, 13 and X5 of the new earnings survey report for 1991. Comparable information for Northern Ireland can be found in table 1 of the new earnings survey (Northern Ireland) report for 1991. Information on the numbers in the sample in each category, to produce combined estimates for the United Kingdom, is in table 24 of the Great Britain report and table 3 of the Northern Ireland report. Copies of both reports are available in the Library.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list, by standard classification, the categories of jobs which are not covered by wage councils and indicate (a) the number of people employed in these jobs both full and part-time and male and female and (b) the average weekly wage before and after overtime for employees in each of their jobs.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that the information requested is not available. The sectors covered by wages councils do not coincide with the categories used in the standard industrial classification (SIC) revised 1980, which is used to compile employment and earnings statistics. It is therefore not possible to identify those employees within SIC categories who are not covered by wages councils. The most recent comprehensive earnings data analysed by SICs are published in the new earnings survey 1991; and the latest employment estimates are in the April and May 1991 issues of the Employment Gazette. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested on TEC chairmen who no longer hold that office is given in the table. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has set down criteria for the appointment of TEC chairmen in the TEC operating agreement.

The articles of association of each TEC also require them to make provision for the regular retirement and election or re-election of board chairmen. There is no present length of service prescribed for TEC chairmen. This is a matter for each TEC to decide.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those service display teams currently in existence, showing the annual cost to defence funds of each team, the value and source of commercial sponsorship of each such display team, and the number of public engagements in the last full year of their operation.

Mr. Aitken: Details of established service display teams are contained in the table. Where costs are not shown, figures are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. In addition, individual service units may form their own local display teams, but information on these is also not held centrally. Mr. Aitken: None.

Mr. Aitken: None.

Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of all equipment belonging to the United Kingdom armed forces which has been loaned or hired back to the company which produced it for display at military exhibitions or other sales promotion purposes in the last five years.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each type of aircraft, the numbers sold abroad in each of the last 10 years and to which country or region of the world.

Mr. Aitken: A breakdown of the total value of defence exports by geographical region between 1985 and 1990 is given in the "Statement of Defence Estimates 1991", volume 2, table 2.7. The full information which the hon. Menwith Hill

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the agreements governing the use of Menwith Hill by the National Security Agency of the United States of America.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The use of Menwith Hill by the United States Department of Defence is subject to confidential arrangements between the United Kingdom and United States Government.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the size and description of accommodation at RAF Wyton, Cambridgeshire, to which the Support Management Group and logistics units may be relocated under present proposals.

Mr. Aitken: RAF Wyton offers 7,700 sq m of accommodation suitable for conversion to offices, together with all the normal support facilities expected of an established RAF station. In addition, Wyton can provide all the married and single accommodation which would be required by the support management group.

Army Apprentices

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the size and description of accommodation at the Army apprentices college, near Harrogate, that will be unused after the transfer of a junior leaders regiment to the college following the relocation of the Army apprentices.

Mr. Aitken: During the current year a total of three inflatable tanks have been lost or stolen during exercises in Wales. The sites for the tanks are carefully chosen, with a view to minimising visibility from public places. It is not feasible individually to guard each tank. The total replacement value of the three items is £26,682.

Survival Clothing

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the survival time during winter months of aircrew wearing survival clothing and non-aircrew without service issue survival clothing, who, as the result of an accident, end up immersed in the North sea 20 to 50 miles east of the River Tay estuary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The survival of a person in the North sea depends on a number of factors, including the tolerance of the person concerned to the environment and the prevailing weather conditions.

In providing search and rescue cover, both the Department of Transport and Ministry of Defence assume a maximum survival time of two hours in the North sea. We do not make separate assessments of the effects of wearing specialist survival clothing.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the survival time during winter months of aircrew wearing survival clothing and non-aircrew without service issue survival clothing, who, as the result of an accident, are left stranded during winter months in the Grampian mountains of Tayside, Central or Grampian regions.

Mr. Aitken: The survival of a person in mountainous areas depends on a number of factors covering equipment, the tolerance of the person concerned to the environment, and the prevailing weather conditions.

It is assessed that the rescue of personnel on land needs to be accomplished, where possible, within four hours. No separate assessment is made for the effects of specialist clothing.

Helicopters

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the base facility for search and rescue helicopters at RAF Leuchars was designed to accommodate Sea King helicopters; and what was the contribution of NATO to its construction.

Mr. Aitken: The base facility at RAF Leuchars is of a standard SAR design capable of supporting a number of helicopter types, including Sea Kings. The original SAR facility was demolished to make way for other NATO dedicated facilities. NATO funded 97 per cent. of the construction costs of the current facility.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the time taken by a search and sea rescue helicopter to reach the position of an accident of incident in the North sea 20 to 50 miles east of the River Tay estuary following receipt of notification of the emergency, for aircraft based at either Lossiemouth, Kinloss, Leuchars, Bulmar or Prestwick; and how the flight time is affected by easterly gale force winds of 50 mph, 60 mph or 70 mph.

Mr. Aitken: After take-off, the time taken, in minutes, to reach the point 20 miles east of the River Tay estuary is:

Aircraft Base	Still Air	Easterly Wind Speed (mph)[1]
		50	60	70
Lossiemouth	47	74	83	95
Kinloss	47	74	83	95
Leuchars	13	24	29	38

Aircraft Base	Still Air	Easterly Wind Speed (mph)[1]
		50	60	70
Boulmer	38	38	38	38
Prestwick	55	86	97	111

[1] The highest hourly wind speed at RAF Leuchars since 1970 is 47 knots.

Time taken, in minutes, to reach the point 50 miles east of the River Tay estuary is:

Aircraft Base	Still Air	Easterly Wind Speed[1]
		50	60	70
Lossiemouth	57	89	100	114
Kinloss	58	91	102	116
Leuchars	29	56	68	87
Boulmer	36	36	36	36
Prestwick	70	109	123	141

[1] The highest hourly wind speed recorded at RAF Leuchars since 1970 is 47 knots.

Any easterly wind will, of course, benefit the flight times for aircraft from Lossiemouth, Kinloss, Leuchars and Prestwick on their return journey.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the time taken by a search and sea rescue helicopter to reach the ski slopes of Glenshee following receipt of notification of an accident for helicopters based at either Lossiemouth, Kinloss, Leuchars, Boulmer or Prestwick; and how the flight time is affected by easterly gale force winds of 50 mph, 60 mph or 70 mph.

Mr. Aitken: Helicopter flight in mountainous regions during high winds is extremely hazardous and would be contemplated only in the most serious of circumstances.

After take-off, the time taken, in minutes to reach the ski slopes of Glenshee following notification of an incident is:

Aircraft Base	Still Air	Easterly Wind Speed[1]
		50	60	70
Lossiemouth	28	28	28	28
Kinloss	27	27	27	27
Leuchars	20	16	16	15
Boulmer	62	49	48	46
Prestwick	62	68	73	78

[1] The highest hourly wind speed recorded at RAF Leuchars since 1970 is 47 knots.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he can give details of the number of rescue missions carried out by search and rescue helicopters during winter months in the Grampian mountains of Tayside, Central and Grampian regions during the last 10 years; and from which base the helicopters left to carry out the missions.

Mr. Aitken: It has not been possible to separate the Tayside region from the Central and Grampian regions. Information on rescues carried out before 1983 is unavailable.

Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital.

Mr. Aitken: Future requirements for medical support to the armed forces, including the provision of service hospitals, are being reviewed.

SCOTLAND

Quarrying

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state his policy toward the creation of coastal super-quarries in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: National planning guidelines on the working of aggregates were issued in 1977. These guidelines, which are still extant, acknowledge the economic potential of coastal super-quarry developments and suggest that they could, in principle, be acceptable if damage to the environment is minimised through careful choice of location and detailed site proposals. These guidelines, along with others, are under review in accordance with a commitment given in the Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200). A draft national planning policy guideline on "Land for Mineral Working" is to be issued for consultation shortly.

Within the national policy framework it is important that development proposals are considered in the context of up-to-date development plans. These should be prepared by planning authorities in full consultation with the local community and should have regard to the economic needs and environmental considerations of their area. Where the planning authority considers that a development such as a coastal super-quarry is likely to have a significant environmental effect, a formal environmental assessment must be prepared, in accordance with Government guidance issued in 1988.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the hospitals in Scotland which had consultant obstetric or general practitioner maternity beds in 1990-91, and give the number of each type in each hospital.

Local Government Finance

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the amount of aggregate external finance allocated to (a) the general revenue account and (b) the general services capital programme for each district council expressed in (i) real terms and (ii) on a per capita basis for each financial year since 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 June 1992]: Since 1990-91, local authority current expenditure has been supported by aggregate external finance (AEF) which consists of non-domestic rate income (NDRI), revenue support grant (RSG) and specific grants. The NDRI and RSG components are neither hypothecated to particular services nor to loan charges on these services arising from outstanding capital debt. The general services capital programme is not part of AEF.

The total AEF, since its introduction, for each district authority, in (i) real and (ii) per capita terms is given in the table.

Housing Statistics

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing (a) the number of non-tolerable houses and (b) the proportion that this represents of the total housing stock in terms of (i) council stock, (ii) Scottish Homes stock, (iii) housing association stock, (iv) private-rented stock and (v) owner-occupied stock in (1) Scotland, (2) Strathclyde region, (3) Renfrew district, (4) Paisley, (5) Johnstone and (6) Elderslie; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing his most recent estimate of (a) the amount and (b) the percentage of housing stock below tolerable standard in (i) Renfrew district, (ii) Strathclyde region and (iii) Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 June 1992]: The latest available estimates supplied by housing authorities of the number of dwellings below tolerable standard are given in the table. Information is held centrally only for Scotland as a whole, regions and districts.

Estimates for March 1991 and March 1992, based on a revised and improved annual return for housing authorities, will be published in the autumn.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the (a) gross and (b) net capital allocation in outturn figures for local authority housing in each Scottish district council, expressed as a cost per dwelling unit; and if he will make a statement.

(2) if he will publish a table showing the (a) gross and (b) net housing revenue allocation in outturn figures for local authority housing in each district council, expressed as a cost per dwelling unit; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 June 1992]: The gross and net forecast capital expenditure outturn figures for 1991-92 on the HRA block for each district council in Scotland, expressed as a cost per council house are set out in the table. The figures include, where appropriate, expenditure in the four urban partnerships and also on the homelessness and energy efficiency projects for which we made available additional resources last year. Final outturn figures for 1991-92 are not available until later in the year.

EC Funds

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing in cash and constant terms the amount of moneys allocated by the European Community to projects within Scotland from (a) the social fund, (b) the regional development fund, (c) RENAVAL, (d) RECHAR and (e) other EC funds in each year since 1987; if he will relate any moneys allocated to the Strathclyde integrated development operation to these figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 June 1992]: The European Commission allocates moneys in ecu on a programme basis. Local partnership committees decide on the allocations of funds to projects within each programme. Each calendar year the Commission applies indexation or inflation rates to awards which are made at constant prices. The available information is set out in the table. There are other EC funds which are of benefit to Scotland but figures for these are not held centrally.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on how the Scottish Office's interpretation and application of the additionality principle in relation to European funding has varied since 1987.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 June 1992]: There was no change in the Scottish Office policy towards additionality from 1987 until 17 February this year, when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced that in future published expenditure plans would show forecast receipts separately for each expenditure progamme.

Water Rates

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing average water rates in Scotland in each year since 1979 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 12 June 1992]: Due to revisions in rateable values and in the method of water charging, water rates in Scotland cannot be compared over the period in question. However, the average household water bills and metered water charges are estimated as follows:

Year	Average household water bill		Average metered water charge
	Cash prices (£ per year)	1992 prices (£ per year)	Cash prices (pence per cubic metre)	1992 prices (pence per cubic metre)

Inverclyde Enterprise Zone

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date the Inverclyde enterprise zone will cease to exist; what is the current estimate of jobs likely to be created before the expiry date of the zone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The 10-year lifespan of the Inverclyde enterprise zone will end on 2 March 1999. At designation, we estimated 3,200 new jobs for the area and this has not changed.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the companies which established themselves within the Inverclyde enterprise zone since its inception; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The following companies are presently on the Inverclyde enterprise zone:

Cigna

Ian's Grill and Takeaway
A1 Installations
Fairway Leisure
Tryrare Ltd.
The Sign Factory

Britannia Life
Massily Logan
C. R. Smith
Gravel Dry Dock Company
Mineba

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the total number of jobs created in the Inverclyde enterprise zone since its inception; if he will break these down by way of managerial, clerical, supervisory, skilled manual, semi-skilled manual, unskilled manual and male and female employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The total number of jobs in the Inverclyde enterprise zone is now 1,000. Information on the breakdown of these jobs into the categories requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only by approaching the individual firms in the zone.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions he has taken action against companies located in the Inverclyde enterprise zone because of serious reductions in employment; if this action involved the triggering of clawback arrangement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: It has not been necessary to take action against any company in the Inverclyde enterprise zone because they have suffered serious reductions in employment.

Employment Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of those on employment training in Scotland are on placement with (a) private employers, (b) local authorites or other public bodies and (c) voluntary organisations.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In Scotland responsibility for monitoring the delivery of employment training rests with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen of these two bodies to write to the hon. Member with the information he has requested.

Inverpolly Estate, Wester Ross

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken to maintain the national nature reserve status of Inverpolly estate, Wester Ross; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 22 May 1992]: I understand that Scottish Natural Heritage is in discussion with the estate with a view to the re-establishment of a national nature reserve agreement for that part of the reserve within the estate's ownership. The original agreement expired in 1986 although a five-year extension was arranged. The area owned by the estate is also protected as a site of special scientific interest.

Scottish Co-operative Development Company

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the Scottish Co-operative Development Company; what matters he expects to discuss; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 June 1992]: I plan to meet representatives of the Scottish Co-operatives Development Company Ltd. in the near future.

I discussed the company's general aims and objectives together with current projects including the co-operative proposed by the workers formerly employed by Armitage Shanks in Barrhead.

Under-fives Education

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the development of pre-five education in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 June 1992]: It is for local authorities to decide on the extent and nature of the pre-school education they provide having regard to available resources, local circumstances and competing priorities. The number of children attending local authority nursery schools in Scotland has risen from 31,700 in 1979 to 45,238 in 1991, an increase of 42 per cent. Over the same period local authority net current expenditure on nursery education increased from £12 million to £45 million.

Provision of pre-five education also extends to day care, which can be provided in a number of ways—at day nurseries, with child-minders or at play-groups. Day care provision has been growing steadily in recent years and, in recognition of this, in March this year the Government provided £0·5 million of special support for an initiative designed to improve the quality and educational content of day care services.

Scotland Europa

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the establishment of Scotland Europa; what is its annual budget; how many staff it is envisaged that it will employ (a) in Scotland, (b) in Strasbourg, (c) in Luxembourg, (d) in Brussels, (e) in London and (f) elsewhere in the financial years 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95; what aims and objectives he has set it; what measurement techniques and criteria he will use to assess its performance; how he will hold it accountable in the public interest; and what plans he has to develop the concept further.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 June 1992]: My right hon. Friend was delighted to be able to be present at the launch of Scotland Europa in Brussels on 26 May. Scotland Europa has been set up as a subsidiary of Scottish Enterprise to provide a representative centre for Scottish organisations in Brussels. Clients who use Scotland Europa's services will be able to obtain early and accurate information about developments in Community policies and to develop better access to the Commission and contacts within other member states. The benefits for Scotland will include a strengthening of Scottish involvement in Community programmes, and the raising of Scotland's profile as a region within Europe.

My right hon. Friend and I have been most impressed by the enthusiasm with which Scottish organisations both public and private have welcomed the initiative. This enthusiasm augurs well for Scotland Europa's future success.

Budgetary, staffing, monitoring and other administrative arrangements are matters for Scottish Enterprise, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Arts and Broadcasting

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Scottish Office's relationship with the Department of National Heritage as regards the arts and broadcasting in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 June 1992]: The Secretary of State's responsibilities in the arts and broadcasting fields are not affected by the creation of the Department of National Heritage. He continues to be responsible for support of the cultural heritage of Scotland through his funding of the national institutions—the national galleries, library and museums of Scotland—the Scottish Museums Council, the Scottish Film Council and a number of Gaelic and other bodies. He is not responsible for support of the live and performing arts in Scotland; this function rests with the Secretary of State for the National Heritage. As regards broadcasting, the Secretary of State for Scotland's main responsibility is for the funding of Gaelic television. The Scottish Office will liaise with the Department of National Heritage in the same way as it did with the Departments previously responsible for the transferred functions.

Councillors' Allowances

Mr. McMasters: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the standard allowance payable to local authority members in each (a) district and (b) regional authority in Scotland and the amount of special responsibility allowance allocated to each authority.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 June 1992]: The Scottish Office environment department does not hold details of the allowances paid to individual local authority members. Each authority decides on its own arrangements within the requirements of the Local Authorities Etc. (Allowances) (Scotland) Regulations 1991 (as amended).

Steel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the contacts between the Scottish Development Agency and the NUCOR Corporation relating to steel production in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 12 June 1992]: Scottish Enterprise, replaced the Scottish development agency on 1 April 1991. My Department, in co-operation with Scottish Enterprise, remains in contact with NUCOR regarding its possible interest in locating in Scotland. The decision is one for NUCOR to take, but naturally we would welcome any proposals which would lead to the continuation of steelmaking in Scotland.

East Kilbride Development Corporation

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the individual property assets held by East Kilbride development corporation in the value range £250,000 to £4 million.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 8 June 1992]: It would be inappropriate to disclose the information requested as it is commercially confidential.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 3 June, Official Report, columns 598-600, if he will give the total 1992-93 budget for the Scottish Office for spending on advertising and other promotional material.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 12 June 1992]: The allocation for expenditure on information publicity and other promotional material in 1992-93 is £3·7 million.

Youth Training

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many youth training places are available to unemployed youths in Kilmarnock and Loudoun constituency.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 12 June 1992]: The information requested is not collected on a constituency basis. However, a special exercise conducted by Enterprise Ayrshire on 14 May 1992 identified 545 youth training vacancies in Ayrshire.

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many 16 and 17-year-olds are unemployed in Kilmarnock and Loudoun; and how many of them have been offered a youth training place.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 12 June 1992]: In the area covered by the Strathclyde education authority careers office in Kilmarnock, which corresponds with the Kilmarnock and Loudoun district, there were 208 young people aged under 18 years registered as unemployed as at 9 April 1992, the latest date for which figures are available. Information about how many of these young people have either sought or been offered a youth training place is not available centrally. However, Enterprise Ayrshire has confirmed that the youth training guarantee is being met in its area.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who is the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of all of his Department's policies; when that person was appointed; what actions his Department has taken since the appointment of a responsible Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 15 June 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Island Patients

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate his Department has made of the annual cost of introducing financial support for patients on non-doctored islands travelling to primary health care practitioners for treatment.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 15 June 1992]: The costs of introducing a scheme to cover the cost of travelling for treatment to primary health care practitioners would vary according to its range and coverage, £400,000 and £1,200,000 per annum. As my right hon. and learned Friend Lord Fraser of Carmylie stated in his letter of 6 May to the hon. Member, there is however no immediate prospect of introducing a financial support scheme of this sort.

Shellfish Farming

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sum of money has been made available by his Department to meet the costs of hygiene testing at or near shellfish farming sites in pursuance of EC directive 492.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 June 1992]: The testing and analysis of shellfish flesh to meet the classification requirements of EC directive 91/492 is being carried out by my Department's marine laboratory in Aberdeen. Additional resources have been provided to the laboratory for what constitutes the major part of the classification exercise. The collection and transmission of the necessary shellfish samples, which are being provided by the growers, is being carried out be environmental health authorities.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to make appointments to or dismissals from the board of Scottish Homes; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 June 1992]: The current term of appointment for five of the nine appointed Scottish Homes Board members expires on 31 March 1993. A sixth appointment will expire on 30 September 1993. Re-appointments or new appointments will be considered by my right hon. Friend in terms of the most effective mix of expertise required in the future by Scottish Homes.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Narayan Shankar

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision on the application by Narayan Shankar for political asylum, August 1989, ref. S670769.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I expect the decision to be taken soon and I will inform the hon. Member at that time.

Wheel Clamps

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what instructions are issued to private companies authorised to clamp vehicles regarding any decision to fit a wheel clamp;

(2) what information he has on the degree of liaison between the Metropolitan police and private companies authorised to clamp vehicles in respect of prioritising illegally parked vehicles.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Under section 104 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984, the decision to fit a wheel clamp to a vehicle may only be authorised by a police officer. Private companies are employed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to carry out the physical task of applying wheel clamps and their operatives act on the instructions of a police officer.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of those private companies authorised by the Metropolitan police to clamp vehicles on public roads.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information requested is as follows:

Parking Protection Limited
Highway Maintenance Service Limited

United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the general council of UKIAS.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I hope to meet members of the executive committee of UKIAS soon to discuss the organisation's future.

Crime, North Yorkshire

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's letter of 5 June to the hon. Member for York about recorded crimes in North Yorkshire.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have placed a copy of the letter in the Library.

Police Cells

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will give the average number of remand prisoners held in police cells in Cumbria over the last convenient period for each police station; how many police hours were spent looking after them; and at what cost to public funds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From 27 October 1991 to 25 January 1992, a daily average of 20 prisoners who normally would be held in prison were held in the following police stations in Cumbria:

Barrow-in-Furness
Carlisle
Kendal
Penrith
Whitehaven
Workington

Information is not available centrally on the numbers held in individual police stations over this period. The available information does not separately identify the number of prisoners held on remand.

During the same period, a total of 17,598 police hours were taken up with tasks relating to the custody and transport of prisoners who would normally be held in prison. The cost to the Prison Service of the police cells operation in Cumbria was £309,433·48.

Feltham Remand Centre (Suicides)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to prevent suicides at Feltham remand centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is already an active suicide prevention management group at Feltham. In addition, the governor recognises the widespread concern about recent deaths at the establishment and has chaired a special group to identify what more could be done.

The group is taking forward a range of initiatives, including a review of induction procedures and of measures to curb the incidence of bullying. Staff have been given refresher training in suicide prevention and a training pack has been produced for future use. Case conferences are held each week to manage prisoners identified as being at risk. A prison visitor scheme has been set up to support those who do not receive regular visits. Links have been made with the local branch of the Samaritans. The establishment is also continuing to develop its policy of encouraging regular contact between prisoners and their families, particularly where there is concern about the prisoner's welfare. In addition, a new unit is to open on 22 June with specially trained staff whose role will be to work to modify the behaviour of known bullies. Video cameras are also being installed in trouble spots to help staff to identify bullies.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the law to bring the provisions concerning manslaughter into line with the protection given to the pre born against abortion after 24 weeks and the Still-Birth (Definition) Act 1992.

Mr. Jack: Although no suitable legislative vehicle is, at present, in prospect, we shall seek to amend the presumption in that Act to bring it into line with the 24-week limit now in the Abortion Act 1967 and with the Still-Birth (Definition) Act 1992 when a suitable opportunity arises.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give further consideration to the points made in the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection report on the London hospital medical college in October 1991; and if he will publish a full detailed response to each point.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The allegations in the BUAV's report were thoroughly investigated by the Home Office scientific procedures inspectorate and considered in detail by Home Office officials. A reply was sent to the general secretary of the BUAV on 17 March, and he has been invited to put any further specific questions to the Home Office in writing.

Turkish Refugees

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of his recent meetings about the hunger strike by the Turkish/Kurdish/Aleri refugees in London; what evidence he has of the after-effects of torture of former Turkish refugees living in London; what information he has about the treatment of their wives and children; what representations he has received about this matter; and what representations he has made to the Turkish authorities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 1 June we were informed that 54 of the original 62 hunger strikers had abandoned their protest. On 5 June we were informed that the remaining eight had taken the same step. Representations have been made in individual cases about the circumstances of Turkish refugees and asylum applicants with exceptional leave living in London and about their families remaining in Turkey. Applications for family reunion are considered in the light of the immigration rules and other published guidelines. My right hon. and learned Friend has had no contacts with the Turkish authorities on these matters.

Asylum

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reduce the time before an asylum seeker given exceptional leave to remain may apply to bring in his family and immediate dependants from four years to three years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. The period of four years reflects the view that family reunion for someone with exceptional leave should not normally be allowed until it is apparent that his stay in the United Kingdom is likely to be permanent.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of asylum seekers for each month from January 1990 until the present date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information available is given in the table.

Applications received for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants

[4] In addition, about 15 applications by nationals of Afghanistan to the British High Commission in New Delhi and 40 applications by nationals of Liberia to the British High Commission in Lagos were processed locally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure greater uniformity in practice about what constitutes urgent and compassionate grounds for family reunion in the cases of asylum seekers seeking exceptional leave to remain.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Compelling and compassionate grounds are considered in the light of the circumstances in each individual case. I am satisfied that decisions in such cases are properly taken.

Vandalism

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy to lessen vandalism in Wales.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 15 June 1992]: Vandalism in Wales is being most effectively addressed when organisations such as the Police, local authorities and other local agencies combine their efforts to develop practical preventive policies. It is such approaches which our policies seek to support.

Squatting

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he plans to introduce legislation on the squatting of residential property before the end of the current year;

(2) how many responses he has received to his consultation paper on squatting; whether he will list the name of each respondent; and whether he will state the number of respondents who were in favour or opposed to each of the four options consulted on.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 16 June 1992]: The Government are committed to strengthening the law against squatting and last year a consultation paper was published setting out various proposals. The responses to this exercise raised a number of issues which require and are receiving careful consideration. It is not possible at this stage to say when legislative proposals will be brought forward. The Government wish to ensure that any new measure should be fair, easy to administer and be effective.

In all, we received 216 responses to the consultation paper. Analysis of the results shows that 133 responses —62 per cent.—were in favour of strengthening the law, 58 —27 per cent.—were opposed, and 25—11 per cent.—came to no clear conclusion. However, those respondents opposed to strengthening the law can generally be taken to have supported option A—leaving the criminal law unchanged; six respondents favoured option B—a limited extension of the law to certain types of squatting; 17 favoured option C—extending the criminal law to all squatting in residential premises; and 56 supported option D—a general extension of the criminal law to cover squatting in any premises.

Eighty four of the responses were from private individuals or companies, and we also received responses from the following public bodies, local authorities and organisation:

The Association of District Councils
The Association of Metropolitan Authorities

Police

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of extra police posts that have been sought by each of the police authorities in Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The four Welsh police authorities have made applications for increases in establishment for 1993-94, as follows:

	Posts
Dyfed-Powys	75
Gwent	37
North Wales	58
South Wales	44

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the established number of full-time officers in each of the police authorities in each of the past five years; and what measures he proposes to enable police authorities to place more policemen on the beat.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The authorised establishments for each police force in England and Wales for the period 1988-89 to 1992-93 are set out in the table.

The Home Secretary attaches importance to increasing the numbers of officers on the beat, but recognises that this is one of many needs. Measures recommended to forces to improve operational deployment include civilianisation, which has enabled the release of 5,700 officers; streamlining of organisational structures; shedding unnecessary middle management; improvement of technical support; and the introduction of flexible shifts.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Children's Play and Recreation Unit

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to continue the developmental and strategic work done by the national children's play and recreation unit beyond the end of the unit's present guaranteed funding period on 31 March 1993.

Mr. Mellor: I am giving very careful consideration to what should happen when the national children's play and recreation unit's present funding comes to an end in March 1993 and I shall be announcing my conclusions at the earliest possible opportunity.

TRANSPORT

Airline Failures

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to establish a scheme to give financial protection for consumers in the event of the financial failure of an airline.

Mr. Norris: My predecessor announced in a written answer on 11 March that he proposed to introduce a scheme providing financial protection for passengers who book tickets on United Kingdom airlines, on the basis of a compensation fund to be financed by a small levy on United Kingdom airlines.

The Civil Aviation Authority has been asked to develop the details of a scheme, for which primary legislation will be needed, and it is currently working on proposals.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what meetings he has had with the International Air Transport Association agency programme joint council to discuss the concept of financial protection for airline passengers.

Mr. Norris: I myself have had no such meetings, but the Civil Aviation Authority's report on financial protection for scheduled passengers—CAP 595—published in August did take account of IATA's response to the consultation document issued by the authority and IATA's comments were recorded in the report.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking following his responses to the recommendations on aircraft noise prepared by the noise review working party 1990.

Mr. Norris: The Government's responses to the recommendations on aircraft noise of the noise review working party were published in August 1991 as part of the consultation paper "Control of Aircraft Noise." We are considering the responses to this paper and our decisions will be announced in due course.

Rail Emergency

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the implication for contingency planning of the emergency which occurred between Hither Green and Grove Park stations on the evening of Tuesday 9 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that British Rail is holding an internal inquiry into the 9 June incident when an electrical sub station at Grove Park flooded and caused the track supply power to be cut off. British Rail is looking at how best to deal with similar electrical engineering difficulties in the future and also at what improvements can be made in keeping passengers better informed.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what compensation under the citizens charter will be made to the passengers trapped for four hours on a train between Hither Green and Grove Park stations on 9 June.

Mr. Freeman: Under the passengers charter, with effect from January 1993, monthly and longer season ticket holders will be able to claim discounts when they renew their tickets if, during the preceding 12 months, performance has been more than a small margin below the standards set in the charter. The delays caused by the flooding of the electrical sub station at Grove Park on 9 June will be included in the performance statistics used for this purpose.

Other ticket holders who were delayed can make claims immediately.

Regional Airlines

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to take forward the recommendations of the Civil Aviation Authority that consideration be given to safeguarding slots at Heathrow for regional airlines within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The authority has made no such recommendation.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he had with professional railwaymen or their associates, or those of civil engineers, prior to drawing up his specification for the proposed London to Kent fast rail link; and what estimate he has made of the capital saving available from his specification compared to a three or four-line scheme, respectively.

Mr. Freeman: The paper "Channel Tunnel Rail Link: Design Standards Brief", circulated on 21 May 1992, was prepared after consultation with British Rail, which also took independent engineering advice. British Rail estimates that the additional cost of four tracks, compared to the proposal for a two-track line with a freight capability outlined in that paper, would be of the order of £2 billion. A three-track scheme is unlikely to have much practical advantage over two tracks with passing loops, and no cost estimates have been made of that option.

Bus Deregulation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, as part of his plans for privatisation and deregulation of the buses in London he will prohibit London Buses Ltd. or any of its subsidiary companies from disposing of property that could be a major asset to any future competitor.

Mr. Norris: No.

Pollution

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce the levels of pollution which are currently forecast to result from the increase in road traffic.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Government are to introduce into United Kingdom law two new EC directives prescribing stricter limits on emissions of gaseous pollutants and particulate matter from motor vehicles. Both directives will help to put the United Kingdom and its EC partners on a course for substantial longer-term progress in improving the quality of air in our towns and cities. The United Kingdom is also working with other member states with a view to limiting emissions of carbon dioxide from motor vehicles.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Immigration Appeal Tribunal

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what budget exists for independent legal representation for the immigration appeal tribunal; and how many independent solicitors have been retained by the IAT in each of the last three years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There is no separate budget for legal representation for the immigration appeal tribunal, IAT; any such fees are paid out of the general budget for the Lord Chancellor's Department. The IAT has been represented by the Treasury Solicitor when representation has been necessary in the last three years.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will show in league order the income tax thresholds in each member state of the European Community with the lowest at the end.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates based on the latest available information are given in the table. Unless otherwise stated the figures relate to 1992.

The threshold is the amount of gross income below which no tax is payable.

Thresholds given relate to a single person, and to income from employment only. Standard deductions available to all employees have been taken into account.

Using the exchange rates published in the Financial Times on 16 June 1992 the league order is as follows:

Country	Threshold £
France	6,445
Luxembourg	5,739
Spain	4,294
Belgium	4,190
Greece	3,752
United Kingdom	3,445
Italy	3,421
Germany	3,244
Ireland	3,206
Denmark	2,895
Portugal	2,167
Netherlands	1,461

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state in pounds sterling how much would be deducted in income tax from (a) a single person and (b) a married couple if their overall income was equivalent to (i) £100 per week, and (ii) £200 per week in each member state of the European Community.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates based on the latest available information are given in the table. Unless otherwise stated, the figures relate to 1992.

All amounts given in the table relate to weekly income and tax due and to income from employment only. For married couples it has been assumed that only one spouse is in employment and that the couple have no children.

Social security contributions are not included in the table, but have been taken into account in calculating tax due where there is tax relief for such contributions. In some countries, social security contributions will be much more significant than income tax for people at these levels of earnings. Using the exchange rates published in the Financial Times on 16 June 1992 the information is as follows:

Tax due on earnings (£/week)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the direct and indirect tax burden in 1978-79 and in 1992-93 as a proportion of gross earnings for (a) a single person, (b) a married couple both working, (c) a married couple with one partner working, (d) a married couple with two children, one partner working and (e) a married couple with two children, both working at 50 per cent., 100 per cent., 150 per cent., 200 per cent., 500 per cent. and 1,000 per cent. of earnings.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 16 June 1992]: The requested figures for 1978-79 and latest estimates for 1992-93 are given in the table.

Notes to Tables

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted-in rate.

2. Since 1990-91, husbands and wives have been taxed independently. Previously the tax liability of couples depended on their joint income. To permit comparisons with earlier years, the table therefore shows income tax and national insurance contributions paid by a married couple as a proportion of their joint income, assuming, as in the earlier years, that where both partners are earners, the husband and wife share the relevant multiple of earnings in the ratio 60:40.

3. In order to provide comparability with 1978-79, when support for children was given partly through child tax allowance, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax for the married couples with two children. The figures for 1978-79 assume that both children are aged younger than 11 years.

4. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These are estimated to be £329·90 per week in 1991-92 and £351·40 per week in 1992-93, using the Government Actuary's Department's assumption of 6¼ per cent. growth in whole economy underlying earnings over 1991-92.

5. The estimates of indirect taxes are based on equations derived from the 1985 family expenditure survey, uprated to later years using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. They are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with the same composition and similar incomes and estimated payments of VAT and other indirect taxes are therefore approximate, even within the income range for which figures are shown. Outside this range, the margin of error is even higher and reliable estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variations, there can be substantial differences between estimates obtained from family expenditure surveys for different years. 6. It has not been possible to make satisfactory estimates of the burden of the 1992-93 community charge in the absence of sample survey results, which would enable actual payments net of adjustments arising from the community charge reduction scheme and community charge benefit to be related to earnings.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the change in taxation per individual arising from each relevant component of the 1992 Budget, both at current prices and net of indexation, for those at one half and three-quarters of average earnings, average earnings, and one-and-a-half, two, five and 10 times average earnings; and if he will provide comparable figures for each budget since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 16 June 1992]: Individuals will be affected directly or indirectly by most Budget measures. Changes in individual tax burdens will depend not simply on the level of income of the individual in question but also on their specific circumstances. It is therefore not possible to provide an assessment of the impact of the measures contained in the 1992 Budget, or in previous Budgets, in the form requested.

Vehicle Tax

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the percentage increases in vehicle excise duty on (a) motorcycles under 250 cc, (b) motorcycles over 250 cc and (c) cars in each of the past five years, and the average income from fuel duty by (i) motorcycles and (ii) private cars expressed as a percentage of the vehicle excise duty payable; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The real percentage increases in vehicle excise duty applied in each of the last five budgets are shown in the table. It is estimated that the average amount of duty paid on fuel consumed by a motorcycle in 1992-93, is about 225 per cent. of the applicable rate of vehicle excise duty. The corresponding estimate for cars and light goods vehicles is 340 per cent. Estimates for private cars are not separately available.

Inflation

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Britain's retail price inflation rate; and what is the EC average.

Mr. Nelson: The inflation rate in the United Kingdom, as measured by the retail prices index compared with a year earlier, stood at 4·3 per cent. in May this year. The corresponding figure for the EC in April, the latest month for which information is available, was provisionally 4·8 per cent.

Labour Costs

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he expects labour costs to adjust, within the framework of the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Nelson: Membership of the exchange rate mechanism will contribute to achieving the Government's objective of defeating inflation on a lasting basis. Within this framework the growth of United Kingdom unit labour costs is forecast to continue to fall as nominal earnings growth slows and productivity picks up.

Premium Bonds

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will supply figures for the number of purchases of premium bonds for each calendar year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson: The number of purchases of premium bonds, for each calendar year from 1979 to date, has been as follows:

Year	(000s)
1979	4,463·1
1980	4,103·1
1981	3,674·1
1982	3,298·3
1983	3,499·5
1984	3,328·6
1985	2,530·0
1986	1,949·8
1987	1,962·0
1988	2,036·7
1989	1,418·0
1990	639·5
1991	727·4
1992	[1]391·7

[1] January to May: provisional.

Unemployment

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what priority unemployment levels take within the economic strategies of the Government.

Mr. Nelson: The object of the Government's economic strategy is to secure permanently low inflation and a healthy supply side. This is the only way to ensure sustained increases in employment.

Financial Regulation

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the regulations which govern the publication of reports by the Securities and Investments Board and the self-regulatory bodies; and if he will make a statement on policy regarding publication.

Mr. Nelson: The publication by the SIB and the self regulating organisations of reports is a matter for the bodies concerned. My officials are discussing with the SIB the scope of its ability to publish reports within the powers transferred to it under the Financial Services Act.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the executive agencies that have sought Treasury approval for the introduction of an agency-specific pay system, separate to the national civil service structure.

Mr. Dorrell: The following executive agencies have had approval to introduce a specific pay system for some or all of their staff:

Agricultural Development Advisory Service
Her Majesty's Stationery Office
Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre
Royal Mint

A number of other agencies are considering changes to their pay and grading systems.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those executive agencies that operate for which the Treasury has approved a group bonus scheme.

Mr. Dorrell: The following executive agencies operate a group bonus scheme:

Central Office of Information
Companies House
Directorate—General of Defence Accounts
Driving Standards Agency
Forensic Science Service
Laboratory of the Government Chemist
Meteorological Office
Radiocommunications Agency
Royal Mint
Vehicle Certification Agency
Vehicle Inspectorate

Maxwell Group

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation report into the Maxwell affair as soon as he receives it and on any consequential changes that may be required to the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Nelson: I shall study IMRO's review and the SIB's assessment of it carefully and consider whether any changes in the Financial Services Act regime are needed.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value of providing mortgage interest tax relief for each year since 1979 inclusive for (a) Scotland, (b) England, (c) Wales, (d) Northern Ireland, (e) the English regions and (f) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table. Estimates of the regional distribution of mortgage interest for the years 1979-80 to 1982-83 have been derived from the results of the survey of personal incomes. However, following the introduction of MIRAS in April 1983, regional information cannot be extracted from Inland Revenue records. Broad estimates for the years 1983-84 to 1991-92 have accordingly been based on analyses of the family expenditure surveys for the years concerned.

Public Expenditure

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the total public expenditure on (a) total social services, (b) education, (c) housing, (d) social security and (e) care services expressed (i) in cash terms and (ii) as a percentage of gross domestic product for each year since 1975.

Mr. Portillo: Information on general Government expenditure by function in the period 1978-79 to 1991-92 in cash terms is given in table 2.2 of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1991 Autumn Statement", Cm. 1920. This information is shown as a percentage of gross domestic product in the table. Corresponding data for earlier years are not available on a consistent basis.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants, and in which Departments, he believes could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government's relocation policy is not centrally directed. Relocation decisions are a matter for individual departmental Ministers. Departments are continuing to review the location of their work in the light of their own particular circumstances and operational requirements in accordance with clear guidelines, a copy of which was placed in the House of Commons Library in December 1991.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government intends to continue its previous policy of devolving Government Departments to provincial centres.

Mr. Dorrell: Yes. There are often substantial advantages to be gained from relocating offices away from London and the south-east. The Government's relocation policy is therefore to pursue the relocation of Government work where that provides best value for money.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce value added tax on the sale of second-hand goods in charity shops; whether the seventh European Commission directive on value added tax applies to goods which are being resold for charitable purposes; and what estimates have been made of (a) the gain to the Exchequer and (b) the loss to charitable income of levying value added tax on goods sold in charity shops after 1996.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 16 June 1992]: We have no such plans and so no financial effects are anticipated. In principle the draft seventh VAT directive, if adopted as at present drafted, would apply to donated second-hand goods being sold for charitable purposes from 1993. But these are zero-rated in the United Kingdom and our zero rates are already fully safeguarded until at least 1997 under the sixth VAT directive. Decisions on tax matters within the EC require unanimity and there is no question of the United Kingdom being forced to accept unwelcome proposals to end zero-rating after that.

EDUCATION

Higher Education

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to introduce a quality audit for institutions of higher education.

Mr. Forman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 9 June 1992, Official Report, columns 88-89.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the maximum salary payable, including perfomance-related element, and the length of time of the contract of the chief executive of the Teachers' Pensions Agency.

Mr. Forth: In 1992-93, the chief executive of the Teachers' Pensions Agency will be able to earn up to £43,470 including performance pay. The chief executive's contract is for five years.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the Teachers' Pensions Agency as an agency; and whether the cost was borne by the parent Department or the new agency.

Mr. Forth: The cost of the launch and associated publicity was £20,000. A total of £17,000 was borne by the Department and the remaining £3,000 by the agency.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Teachers' Pensions Agency; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. Forth: The chief executive of the Teachers' Pensions Agency gained a first degree in botany from the university of Manchester.

Personal Records

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what conclusions he has reached on the implications of the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Graham Gaskin for people seeking access to personal records for which he has responsibility and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Forth: The consultation document issued by the Department of Health on the implications of the Graham Gaskin judgment took the view that the application of the judgment should be restricted to social services records. Some of the responses queried this interpretation. We are therefore considering whether there are any implications for educational records.

Class Sizes

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his assessment of the maximum size of class in which the national curriculum can be satisfactorily delivered.

Mr. Forth: It is for schools to determine the appropriate size of teaching groups for different subjects in the light of their individual circumstances. The most important thing, however, is the quality of the teaching which pupils receive.

Technology Schools Initiative

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what plans he has to direct further resources towards the technology schools initiative network of schools; what are the differences in the criteria met by those schools from those of city technology colleges and whether the TSI network of schools will be given the opportunity to became full city technology colleges;

(2) if he will make a statement on the Government's future support towards recently designated technology schools within the technology schools initiative; and what steps these schools themselves can take to ensure that support.

Mr. Forth: The Government have announced capital allocations totalling £25 million in 1992-93 to support the technology teaching plans of 100 schools selected as a result of competitive bidding. These schools retain their existing status as grant-maintained, voluntary-aided, county or voluntary-controlled schools; in this respect they differ from city technology colleges established under the Education Reform Act (1988). The Government plan to expand and develop the network of schools supported by the technology schools initiative in future years.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if the technology schools initiative provision for the Southampton area is to be maintained; and what is the financial commitment for 1992-93.

Mr. Forth: The following school in the Southampton area was selected for support under the technology schools initiative in 1992-93.

Applemore School—£250,000 allocation.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps a local education authority school would need to take to achieve levels of provision equal to those of city technology colleges; how many of the existing TSI schools operate within the local education authority system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Of the 100 schools selected for capital support in 1992-93 under the technology schools initiative, 70 are maintained by local education authorities of which eight are voluntary aided schools. The recurrent funding of these schools is unaltered by their selection within the technology schools initiative. The funding of city technology colleges is determined separately.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will provide details of the financial implications of a primary school with 360 full-time five to 11-year-old pupils and 39 full-time equivalent three to four-year-old nursery pupils opting for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: The main recurrent grant for GM schools is annual maintenance grant—AMG—which is calculated with reference to the local management of schools scheme of the former maintaining LEA. This is set for GM schools in most LEAs at 15 per cent. above their LMS entitlement. This standard cash addition helps meet the cost of services previously provided free by the LEA. There is also a smaller addition related to school meal subsidy levels in that LEA. Calculation of AMG in respect of nursery pupils depends upon the relevant LEA's funding arrangements for such pupils.

GM schools are also eligible to receive other grants as follows:

i. Transitional grants to help meet the transitional costs of schools newly approved for GM status—in 1992-93 primary schools with more than 200 pupils can receive £30,000 plus £30 per pupil, to a maximum of £60,000.

ii. Special Purpose Grants to help with a variety of activities. For example the SPG for "development" helps fund in-service training and implementation of the National Curriculum and assessment, for which LEAs are funded via the GEST programme. This SPG is paid at a flat rate of £42·50 per pupil with a £5,000 minimum. Other SPGs are available to help with VAT, staff restructuring and premises insurance.

iii. There are two types of capital grant available to GM schools: a formula allocation for the purchase of equipment or small scale capital works; and project allocations for specific capital work. GM schools bid for project allocations and bids are considered in competition.

PRIME MINISTER

Prosecuting Authorities (Representations)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister if he will outline his policy concerning representations to be made by individual Departments to the prosecuting authorities while considering evidence against individuals in cases concerning their Departments.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The prosecuting authorities for which I am responsible as Attorney-General apply a dual test when considering any prosecution. First there must be a sufficiency of evidence. Secondly, a prosecution must be required in the public interest.

In 1951 my predecessor then Sir Hartley Shawcross gave an authoritative explanation of the duty of the prosecutor in relation to the second test. That explanation referred to the duty of the Attorney-General when considering whether to authorise a prosecution but the principles are of general application. Briefly, it is the duty of the prosecuting authority, where appropriate in consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, to acquaint itself with all the relevant facts, including, for instance, the effect which the prosecution, successful or unsuccessful as the case may be, would have upon public morale and order, and with any other consideration affecting public policy. Such consultations may, where appropriate, include Ministers and Government Departments. The assistance of those consulted is confined to informing the prosecuting authority or the Law Officers of particular considerations that might affect the prosecution decision, and does not consist, and must not consist, in telling it or them what the decision ought to be. Responsibility for the eventual decision does not rest with those making representations as to the public interest but with the independent prosecuting authorities.

Where a Department believes that it has information material to a prosecution decision it should so inform the prosecutor either directly or, where appropriate, through the Law Officers.

Earth Summit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost of shipping his official car from British Guyana to Rio de Janeiro for use during his visit to the Earth summit; how much was spent on re-equipping the car for this visit; and what attempts were made to seek appropriate vehicles in Brazil prior to deciding to import the car from Georgetown.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 June 1992]: The cost of shipping a protected vehicle from Guyana to Rio de Janeiro for my use during the Earth summit was £2,400. The vehicle is used by our diplomatic missions in south and central America as the situation so requires. The cost of necessary repairs to the car amounted to about £15,000. No suitable vehicles were available in Brazil at the same or lower cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Skopje

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's current policy in EC discussions concerning the naming of the Republic of Skopje.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We hope that EC partners can soon find a common position which will allow recognition of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

Iraq

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the safety of the Kurds in northern Iraq and the Shias in southern Iraq and the Marshlands in the last three months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We remain concerned about the plight of the civilian population in the whole of Iraq and in particular about recent reports of increased military attacks on civilians in the southern marshes.

On 4 June the Governments of France, the United States and the United Kingdom told the Iraqi Government that they should cease repressive actions against all the peoples of Iraq in violation of United Nations Security Council resolution 688.

We are determined to keep up the pressure on Iraq to meet all its obligations under Security Council resolutions.

Antarctic Treaty

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 86, if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation on the environment protocol of the Antarctic treaty before the end of July.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We wish to introduce legislation as soon as possible to enact the provisions of the environmental protocol. It will unfortunately not be feasible to do so before the end of July.

Ceremonial Dress

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 8 June, Official Report, column 63, if he will specify in each case the items of ceremonial dress for which expenditure was incurred.

Mr. Goodlad: Ceremonial dress normally consists of a uniform, a hat, boots and a sword.

WALES

Learning Disabilities

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been allocated in joint finance money to the health service in Wales; and what proportion has been spent on projects for people with learning disabilities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A total of £1·8 million has been allocated in 1992-93 to projects in Wales under the joint finance scheme. A detailed breakdown of this amount, to identify the sum allocated to projects related to people with a mental handicap, could be made only at disproportionate cost. However, the main support for developing services for people with a mental handicap is the all-Wales mental handicap strategy, under which £41·5 million has been allocated in 1992-93.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

Mr. David Hunt: The programme has yet to be finalised. An announcement will be made shortly.

Ysgol Derwyn School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Ysgol Derwyn CP school, Clwyd; and if he will meet (a) the staff and governors and (b) the parent teacher association of the school.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans at present to do so.

Homelessness

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of individuals registered under the homeless persons legislation as being homeless in Wales for each year since 1979 inclusive with the percentage increase/decrease on the previous years, and if he will provide a breakdown by local authority.

Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he proposes to assist local authorities in their attempts to tackle the maintenance problems of housing stock.

Mr. David Hunt: For the private stock, this year I have made over £169 million available for home renovation and disabled facilities grants—an increase of £82 million over last year—with a further £26 million available for area renewal and defective dwellings.

For the public stock, I have increased subsidy allowances by an average of 7·5 per cent. per dwelling this year with biggest increases going to authorities with stock in poorest condition. Authorities estimate spending on management and maintenance within their housing revenue accounts at over £190 million this year. In addition to the estimated £91 million available to authorities for capital expenditure from credit approvals, usable receipts and revenue contributions I have set aside up to £6 million to tackle problems on selected estates under our estate partnership programme.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the proportion of the housing stock in Wales earmarked for the elderly in (a) 1980 and (b) 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: It is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the proportion of Welsh housing stock suitable specifically for elderly persons.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to restore the level of council housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Local authorities are being encouraged to develop their enabling role and work in partnership with housing associations who are now the main providers of new social housing in Wales. Inclusive of private finance Housing for Wales's total programme for 1992-93 will amount to over £180 million, which will provide some 4,000 new homes.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new council houses were built in 1991; and how many council houses were sold.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1991, a total of 421 council houses were built and 3,668 were sold.

Disablement Benefits

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people living in Wales who suffer disabilities receive disablement benefits.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest available information on the numbers of recipients in Wales of social security disablement benefits and state compensation for disablement—war pensions—is shown in the table. The total of the numbers of recipients of the different benefits may be greater than the number of people receiving benefit as people may receive more than one benefit.

Benefit	Latest date for which estimated number of recipients is available	Number in receipt
Attendance Allowance	31 March 1991	63,000
Mobility Allowance	2 April 1992	59,000
Industrial Injury Disablement Benefit	30 March 1991	19,000
War Pension	31 December 1991	12,000
Severe Disablement Allowance	31 March 1990	22,000

Notes:
1. The above figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand (000).
2. Attendance allowance is an estimate based on a 1 per cent. sample.
3. Industrial injury disablement benefit numbers are current assessments but do not include reduced earning allowance or other industrial injury benefits and are based on a 10 per cent. sample.
4. War pension figures are based on a 10 per cent. sample.
5. Severe disablement allowance is based on a 1 per cent. sample.
6. The above refer to Wales as a statistical region with the exception of war pensions which is based on post office locality.

Historic Buildings Council

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish the next report of the Historic Buildings Council for Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The 35th annual report of the Historic Buildings Council for Wales has been published today. The report covers the financial year 1990-91 and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the statutory responsibilities that he intends to propose shall be placed on the unitary local authorities in Wales following his proposed reorganisation of local government in Wales;

(2) if he will list the non-statutory and permissive powers he plans to propose shall be made available to the unitary local authorities in Wales following his proposed reorganisation of local government in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 15 June 1992]: Consultation on the reorganisation of local government in Wales has proceeded on the basis that the new unitary authorities will be responsible for those services currently the responsibility of the existing district and county councils. Detailed discussions on service delivery arrangements under the new structure are taking place with the local authority associations under the aegis of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Superphoenix Fast Reactor

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what United Kingdom investment has been made to date into the superphoenix fast reactor in France; and whether there are any outstanding commitments to the project by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: Nuclear Electric has a 1·65 per cent. holding in the German company Schnell-Bruter-Kerngraftwerks GmBh, SBK, which has a 16 per cent. holding in Superphoenix. There are no outstanding commitments.

Innovation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he hopes to complete his consideration of the Faraday proposals, put forward by the Prince of Wales's working group on innovation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Speech made by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on the Faraday proposals during the debate on science and technology on 11 June, Official Report, columns 481-82.

Privatisations

Mr. Tyler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will review the role, responsibilities and powers of the regulatory bodies for former privatised industries within his Department's responsibilities to ensure more effective limitation of charges to the consumer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The powers of the regulators were reviewed in the preparatory work for the Competition and Service (Utilities) Act 1992. The provisions of that Act enhance the powers of the regulators, and facilitate greater competition in gas. The industry regulators have already achieved price reductions in real terms since privatisation of 11 per cent. in BT's average residential bill, and 13 per cent. for domestic gas. Price rises for domestic electricity are limited to the increase in the RPI for the first three years of the new arrangements.

Export Credits

Ms. Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has had any discussions with Commissioner Sir Leon Brittan on unfair competition in conditions governing export credits available in EC countries.

Mr. Needham: No. However, my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State wrote to Sir Leon Brittan in September 1991 offering support for the Commission's work on eliminating subsidies in export credits and my officials are currently engaged in discussions on this with the Commission and their counterparts in other member states.

Ferrybridge C

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the present timetable for the installation of flue gas desulphurisation equipment at Ferrybridge C power station.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the President is considering an application from PowerGen for consent to fit flue gas desulphurisation equipment at Ferrybridge C. Subject to this, the timetable for installation of the equipment is a commercial matter for the company, consistent with meeting its emission limits set by the United Kingdom's national plan for implementing the European Community's large combustion plants directive.

European Community Directives

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the directives relevant to his Department made by the EC in the past 12 months; and what estimate he has made of the number of companies each directive will affect.

Mr. Needham: Following is a list of EC directives adopted since 1 June 1991 for which my Department has policy responsibility. No estimate has been made of the number of companies each directive will affect.

Commission Directive 91/442/EEC of 23 July 1991 on dangerous preparations, the packaging of which must be fitted with child resistant fastenings. Official Journal Reference L238 of 27 August 1991.

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the draft directives issued by DGXXIII of the European Commission in the past 12 months; what estimate he has made of the number of companies each directive will affect; and at what cost.

Mr. Needham: DG XXIII of the European Commission has issued three draft directives in the past 12 months. They are:

(i) Proposal for a Council Directive supplementing the Statute for a European association with regard to the involvement of employees.

(ii) Proposal for a Council Directive supplementing the Statute for a European cooperative society with regard to the involvement of employees.

(iii) Proposal for a Council Directive supplementing the Statute for a European mutual society with regard to the involvement of employees.

No estimate has yet been made of the number of organisations likely to be affected by the directives, or the potential costs. A public consultation exercise is to be undertaken shortly which aims to assess the possible effect of the directives.

Trade Balances

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the invisible trade balance for each of (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the USA, (c) Germany, (d) France and (e) Japan for the latest available year.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 June 1992]: The information is in the table:

Car Imports

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give figures for imports of American-built cars from the United States of America to the United Kingdom for the latest available year, and comparable figures for imports from Germany and Japan.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 June 1992]: Information on United Kingdom imports is regularly published in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", which is available in the Library of the House. Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 June 1992]: The most recent year for which the OECD has published information on both the United Kingdom's population and exports is 1990. Based on this information, the value of United Kingdom visible exports per capita was £1,805 in 1990.

The OECD does not publish United Kingdom figures for gross national product. On the basis of gross domestic product, the United Kingdom's exports of goods accounted for 18·9 per cent. of GDP in 1990 and 18·2 per cent. in 1991.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the involvement of Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte in the review of assisted areas being conducted by his Department; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin I have been asked to reply.

Proposals to implement the use of personal protective equipment directive—89/656/EEC—were published by the Health and Safety Commission—HSC—on 6 December 1991 in its consultative document "Personal Protective Equipment at Work. Proposals for Regulations and Guidance". A copy is in the Library. The closing date for comments was 5 April 1992.

Within the consultative document, the HSC requested comments on the need for guidance in support of the regulations. It proposed that specific guidance on "Hand and Arm Protection" be prepared as appendix 4 to the supporting guidance. Both sides of industry will be further consulted following the preparation of such specific draft guidance.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how and where the post of Fair Employment Commission director was advertised and recruited.

Mr. Atkins: The post of chief executive of the Fair Employment Commission, was filled in 1989 following advertisements in the Belfast Telegraph, the Belfast Newsletter, the Irish News, The Guardian, the Irish Times, The Sunday Telegraph and the Sunday Times.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what factors other than religious discrimination contribute to apparent discrepancies in work patterns in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The existence of religious discrimination in Northern Ireland was central to Parliament's acceptance of the need for strengthened legislation to deal with continuing inequalities in employment. It was, however, also accepted that other factors contribute to the differentials in employment and unemployment between Catholics and Protestants. The hon. Gentleman may find it useful to refer to the discussion on this complex matter in SACHR's "Report on Fair Employment" (Cm 237).

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) the sectors of employment and (b) the individual companies or employers considered exempt for the purposes of fair employment monitoring.

Mr. Atkins: Only private sector concerns with 10 or fewer employees are exempt from the monitoring provisions of the Fair Employment (NI) Act 1989.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the difference between a target and a quota when the FEC investigates or scrutinises the annual monitoring returns of a company and sets a target to balance the work force.

Mr. Atkins: Under fair employment legislation the promotion of affirmative action to secure change permits the setting of goals and timetables against which progress may be measured. Goals and timetables are targets that an employer would expect, and should make good faith efforts, to reach within a certain timescale. Quotas on the other hand reserve jobs or training places for people on the basis of religious belief or political opinion and are unlawful in Northern Ireland.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will institute a survey of whether Protestant employers are more likely to discriminate than Roman Catholic employers.

Mr. Atkins: I have no plans to do so.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the extent to which balance in the work force is an accurate measure of equality of opportunity and sectarian balance can be achieved by discrimination.

Mr. Atkins: Balance in a work force is no guarantee that equality of opportunity is being afforded to both sides of the community. It is for this reason that the law requires employers regularly to review not only the religious composition of their work forces but their employment practices.

Travellers

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the sites that have been provided for travelling people or itinerants.

Mr. Atkins: Fully serviced sites have been provided for travelling people by district councils in Coalisland, Newry and Omagh and two sites in Londonderry.

Two serviced sites in Belfast are due for completion by September 1992. In the interim, travelling people are being provided with basic amenities at these two locations.

A partly serviced site has also been provided in Tattykeel, Omagh.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many travelling people or itinerants are presently residing on sites provided for their accommodation.

Mr. Atkins: There are approximately 620 travelling people currently residing on sites provided by local councils.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many travelling people or itinerants are known to be trespassing on (a) public land and (b) privately owned land.

Mr. Atkins: There are approximately 319 travelling people—75 vans—on public land and 46—11 vans—on private land. Their locations are as follows:

	People	Vans
Public land
Belfast	236	51
Strabane	18	7
Armagh	40	11
Fermanagh	25	6
Private land
Craigavon	16	4
Magherafelt	30	7

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of travelling people or itinerants currently residing in Northern Ireland; how many are United Kingdom citizens; and how many are immigrants from the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: A survey of travelling people in Northern Ireland in 1988, indicated that there were 1,050 individuals. Their numbers have not changed significantly during the last 3½ years.

It is estimated that 85-90 per cent. of those currently residing in Northern Ireland were born in Northern Ireland.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

Mr. Mates: The proposals for market testing in Northern Ireland departments and agencies are under consideration and an announcement will be made shortly.

Homelessness

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of individuals registered under the homeless persons legislation as being homeless in Northern Ireland for each year since 1979, inclusive with the percentage increase or decrease on the previous year; and if he will provide a breakdown by local authority.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is not available prior to April 1989 when the homelessness provisions of the Housing (NI) Order 1988 came into operation. The Northern Ireland Housing Executive is the sole public housing authority in Northern Ireland, and I am advised by its chairman that the number of applicants accepted as being either homeless or threatened with homelessness since 1 April 1989 and the percentage increase on the previous year is as follows:

Year	Number	Difference
1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990	5,166	—
1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991	7,219	+39·7
1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992	7,494	+ 3·8

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was (a) the total expenditure and (b) the additional specific allocation for tackling homelessness which was provided in the latest financial year giving a breakdown by local authority.

Mr. Atkins: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive is the sole public sector housing authority in Northern Ireland. No resources are allocated to the executive specifically to tackle homelessness. However, its chairman has advised me that the executive spent £1·216 million on homelessness in 1991-92.

Cancer

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what were the cancer mortality rates in each electoral ward in the Southern health board area in each of the past 10 years;

(2) what were the average cancer mortality rates, in each health unit of management in Northern Ireland in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Hanley: This information is not available at electoral ward level. Figures at board level and figures based on the presently defined boundaries of health board units of management, are as follows:

Year	Rate per 100,000 of population
1982	177
1983	180

International Fund for Ireland

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to meet the board of the International Fund for Ireland to discuss his Department's contacts with the fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has regular meetings with the chairman of the board of the international fund; the last such meeting was on 8 June. The Government are conscious of the valuable work being carried out by the fund which is making a significant contribution to the economic and social regeneration of the areas in which it works. We look forward to maintaining close contact with the board which is performing such a significant role.

ENVIRONMENT

Gravel Extraction and Waste Tipping

22. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the local authority associations and European Community institutions about the environmental problems arising from the twin industries of gravel extraction and the tipping of waste.

Mr. Baldry: There have been no specific discussions about the environmental aspects of gravel extraction and subsequent landfilling of wastes, but there has been involvement with the local authority association and the European Commission in consideration of a draft Directive on landfilling of wastes.

Water Regulation

25. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account the Office of Water Services takes of the level of investment in the water industry in its regulatory functions.

Mr. Maclean: As the water industry is engaged in a massive capital investment programme estimated to cost £28 billion, the Director General of Water Services, as the independent regulator, necessarily has a close interest in ensuring that the programme is carried out on time and in an efficient way.

Rented Housing

26. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received over the shortage of affordable rented accommodation.

Mr. Baldry: I receive such representations fairly frequently. There are local shortages of rented housing in some parts of the country, and the Government have a major public expenditure programme, amounting to nearly £8 billion this year, to build new social housing, renovate existing housing, and help council tenants on low incomes to afford their rents.

Mortgage Repossessions

27. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of the schemes to assist home owners threatened with repossession by banks and building societies.

Sir George Young: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and my right hon. Friends the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretaries of State for Social Security and for Wales and I met the Council of Mortgage Lenders on 2 June to review progress with mortgage rescue schemes.

We were encouraged to hear the lenders' estimate that measures taken since December will save some 55,000 repossessions this year.

Both mortgage lenders and the Government will continue to give priority to making rescue schemes work.

Earth Summit

24. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining agreements reached at the Earth summit.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Members for Edinburgh, East (Dr. Strang) and for York (Mr. Bayley).

28. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to meet Maurice Strong to discuss the outcome of the Rio de Janeiro summit.

Mr. Howard: I had very useful discussions with Mr. Strong while in Rio, but I have no specific plans at the moment to meet him again.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of the official texts of the agreements reached at the United Nations conference in Rio de Janeiro.

Mr. Howard: The climate change convention text is already in the Library; the other texts will follow when official copies are available.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

29. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what savings have been made by local government as a result of the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering.

31. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what savings have been made by local government as a result of the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Research commissioned by the Department and carried out by the Institute of Local Government Studies at the university of Birmingham has found that annual cost savings of 6 per cent. of contract value have been achieved by local authorities as a result of competition for services under the Local Government Act 1988.

River Quality

30. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of rivers in England are in good or fair condition; and what is the European average.

Mr. Maclean: The 1990 river quality survey published by the National Rivers Authority shows that around 90 per cent. of river length in England and Wales is of good or fair quality. A review of river classification schemes across the European Community published in 1988 by the Water Research Centre showed that the average figure in the EC for rivers of comparable quality was 75 per cent.

Urban Programmes

32. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional statistics he proposes to collect under the Government's review of inner cities and urban renewal programmes.

Mr. Redwood: Inner city policies and programmes are regularly evaluated. We will continue to assess them in the light of various pieces of information including existing statistics, the 1991 census of population, experience of the first two rounds of city challenge and results of current research assessing the impact of inner city policies generally.

Subsidiarity

33. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will implement the principle of subsidiarity in the way the responsibilities of his Department are exercised and in the relationship between his Department and locally elected bodies.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government are always guided by a proper interpretation of the rules of subsidiarity when conducting their relations with local government.

Poll Tax

34. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total cost to date of introducing, administering and collecting the poll tax, including the cost of Government-initiated relief schemes.

Mr. Robin Squire: The cost of preparing for administering and collecting the community charge in England up to 1 April 1992 has been about £1·2 billion. Government relief schemes have reduced the burden of local domestic taxation to 15 per cent. of local government spending and have not added to overall public expenditure.

Pollution Inspectorate

35. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the work of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and if he will arrange for hon. Members who wish to do so to visit the inspectorate.

Mr. Maclean: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has a key role in protecting the environment by enforcing the industrial pollution control regulations. The system has been strengthened by the introduction of integrated pollution contol under the Environmental protection act 1990, and the inspectorate's manpower complement has been increased significantly, from 199 at the time of its setting up in 1987 to 377 today.

Where hon. Members are seeking factual information on particular cases dealt with by the inspectorate, I am happy to arrange for those hon. Members to meet the inspectorate.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what powers of enforcement Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has with regard to integrated pollution control; and what considerations are taken into account in determining the charges levied on industry for administering the inspectorate of pollution;

(2) how many staff are currently employed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; what are the current operating costs of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and what the figures were for the previous two years.

Mr. Howard: The enforcement powers of inspectors of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution—HMIP—in relation to integrated pollution control are contained in part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. They include powers to revoke an authorisation to carry on a process; and to serve an enforcement notice to secure necessary improvements in the operation to a process, to serve a prohibition notice in relation to a process where there is considered to be an imminent risk of serious pollution.

It is an offence to operate a prescribed process without an authorisation or in contravention with the conditions within an authorisation, and to fail to comply with an enforcement or prohibition notice.

HMIP's fees and charges for pollution control are set so as to recover the inspectorate's costs relating to the carrying out of integrated pollution control and regulation of premises under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, as required by the relevant legislative provisions—section 8 of the Environmental Protection Act and section 11A of the Radioactive Substances Act.

There are currently 308 staff in post in HMIP. The figures for the previous two years were:

1 April 1990 172
1 April 1991 226·5

HMIP's authorised complement for 1992-93 has been increased to 377·5. Recruitment of additional staff is in progress.

In 1991-92, the operating cost of the inspectorate, on a full economic cost basis, was £20·5 million. For 1992-93, the forecast cost is £27·5 million, of which some £12·3 million relates to integrated pollution control and Radioactive Substances Act regulation and is recoverable through fees and charges. The increased total cost for 1992-93 is mainly due to the increase in staff in post and complement. Equivalent cost information for 1990-91 is not available.

Water Charges

36. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring the Director General of Water Services is undertaking of the charging policies of water companies.

Mr. Maclean: The director general monitors the charging schemes operated by water and sewerage undertakers to ensure that they do not give undue preference to or unfairly discriminate against any group or class of customer.

38. Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring the Office of Water Services is carrying out over the level of water charges in the south-west.

Mr. Maclean: The Director General of Water Services monitors all water companies to ensure that they comply with the RPI plus K formula which is a condition of their licence, and that they do not give undue preference to or unfairly discriminate against any group or class of customer.

Environmental Protection Agency

37. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to bring forward legislative proposals for the environmental protection agency.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, Central (Mr. Jones) on 13 May, Official Report, column 125.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's arrangements for consulting the Data Protection Registrar during the planning stage of any initiative involving the collection, use or disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My Department observes the provisions of the Data Protection Act. Consultations with the Data Protection Registrar have taken place where necessary, and I am satisfied that arrangements are effective.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority in England and Wales the current percentage rate of community charge outstanding in respect of the uniform business rate.

Mr. Robin Squire: Community charge is not payable in respect of the uniform business rate. Authorities in England collected 89 per cent. of their 1991-92 budgeted community charge income by 31 March 1992 and 95 per cent. of their non-domestic rates income by the same date.

I have today placed in the Library of the House collection figures for each authority in England. Figures for Welsh authorities are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average annual increase in uniform business rate in (a) the South Lakeland district area and (b) the rest of England and Wales for 1991 and the current year.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 11 June 1992]: In each financial year the increase in the uniform business rate poundage is limited to the rate of inflation as measured by the retail prices index in September of the preceding year. This was 10·9 and 4·1 per cent. in 1991-92 and 1992-93 respectively.

In 1991-92 the annual increase in the aggregate rate bill for businesses in the South Lakeland district was 17·4 per cent. and for the rest of England and Wales it was 10·1 per cent. These figures take account not only of the increase in the poundage, but also of the transitional arrangements which are phasing in the effect of the 1990 reforms. For the current year, taking account of the changes to the transitional arrangements proposed in the Budget, we estimate the figures to be 2·8 per cent. and zero respectively.

Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to open records of pollutant discharges and offer environmental monitoring activities for public inspection.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 15 June 1992, Official Report, column 439.

Community Charge

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what purpose the community charge register has been used; and what plans he has for using this register in the future.

Mr. Robin Squire: Charging authorities use their community charges register to determine individuals' liability for the community charge. Under the council tax authorities will not require a register of all adults, although they will generally wish to identify who is liable in respect of a property. In the initial stages the community charges register will help them to do this, but after 1 April 1993 it will quickly lose its relevance.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had, since 1 January 1990, about purchases by local authorities of computer equipment and software for the administration of the community charge which failed to operate efficiently; what estimates he has made (a) of the number of local authorities involved and (b) the extra costs incurred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department has not received any specific representations.

Grant Settlement

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the new grant settlement for 1993-94 for local authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities on 21 May 1992, Official Report, column 195.

Council Tax

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has given to ensure that local authorities use computer software for the administration of the council tax which is (a) efficient and cost effective and (b) compatible, as far as possible, with equipment used in the administration of the community charge.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is a matter for local authorities to decide which computer system they use to run the council tax. My Department has sponsored a detailed council tax computer system specification produced by the Local Authority Systems Alliance. This offers advice on all identified user requirements and addresses the varied application needs of authorities for in-house computer development, software house systems and package evaluation. A copy has been sent to all authorities.

Rent Control

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many lettings became available as the result of the abolition of rent control in June 1987.

Mr. Baldry: Rent control in England was ended, for new lettings only, when the relevant provisions of the Housing Act 1988 came into effect on 15 January 1989. The most recent figures available are from the 1990 private renters survey. By summer 1990 there were an estimated 480,000 lettings in the newly decontrolled sector in England, 130,000 of them in properties which had not been let to private tenants two years earlier.

Council House Sales

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what receipts have been received by the Easington district council in each year since 1987 through the sale of council houses, land and other buildings.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is as follows:

Easington DC: Total sales of fixed assets

	£'000
1987-88	3,022
1988-89	4,280
1989-90	5,152
1990-91	4,582
1991-92	[1]3,925

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the regulations governing service charges to former council tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: No changes are proposed. Council tenants who purchase their flats under the right to buy normally covenant in their lease to pay a reasonable contribution towards the costs of repairs and other services provided by the landlord. This follows private sector practice.

The protections against unreasonable service charges in the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 apply to all leaseholders, including former council tenants.

Local Government Commission

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what review the Local Government Commission for England will be conducting of the functions of parish or town councils in respect of developing enhanced responsiveness to local needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The policy guidance to the Local Government Commission makes it clear that in considering whether options for changes to local government structure allow for the effective local discharge of functions or enhanced responsiveness to local needs, the commission should take into account the scope for delegations to parish councils.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what review the Local Government Commission for England will be conducting of parish, town and community boundaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend may direct the Local Government Commission to review parish boundaries under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1992. He has not yet decided what parish reviews he will direct the commission to carry out.

Emissions

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many fossil-fuelled power stations have had their consent to emit sulphur dioxide reduced under the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when the review of existing consents for the emission of sulphur dioxide, carbon dioxide and carbon monoxide from all fossil-fuelled power stations will be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No authorisations for fossil-fuelled power stations have yet been granted under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Two applications for authorisation, in respect of National Power's stations at Pembroke in Wales and Padiham in Lancashire, are currently being considered by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The company has agreed to extend the determination period for these applications until 30 September. The remaining applications for authorisation are the subject of appeals to my right hon. and learned Friend about commercial confidentiality. They cannot be determined until after the appeal decision, which will be made as soon as possible.

Planning and Compensation Act 1991

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what parts of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 remain to be implemented; and if he will make a statement on the timetable for doing so.

Mr. Baldry: The main provisions of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 have already been implemented. Following further public consultations, my right hon. and learned Friend proposes to make orders and regulations giving effect to the remaining provisions in the summer and autumn of 1992, as follows:

Early Summer

Notices etc. of applications for planning permission—(section 16)

Land of interested planning authorities and development by them—(section 20)

Mid Summer

Remaining enforcement provisions—(sections 2, 4 (part) and 10)

Demolition of buildings—(section 13)

Autumn

Remaining provisions on Planning obligations—(section 12, (Schedules 106A and 106B))

Simplified planning zones—(section 28).

EC Directives

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the environmental directives which have been issued by the European Community in the past 12 months; and what estimate he has made of the number of companies each directive will affect.

Mr. Maclean: The following is a list of environmental directives issued by the European Community since 1 June 1991. Information on the numbers of companies affected by each directive is not collected centrally.

Homelessness

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost of providing bed and breakfast accommodation for homeless persons for each year since its introduction; and if he will provide a breakdown by (a) region and (b) local authority.

Mr. Baldry: The available information for England is as follows:

Bed and breakfast accommodation for homeless persons: England

	Net expenditure £ million
1984-85	15·7
1985-86	33·9
1986-87	75·5
1987-88	104·2
1988-89	90·2
1989-90	72·6

Tables giving the readily available breakdowns by region and by local authority, covering 1988-89 and 1989-90, have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of individuals registered under the homeless persons legislation as being homeless in (a) England as a whole and (b) Great Britain as a whole for each year since 1979 inclusive, with the percentage increase/decrease on the previous year; and if he will provide a breakdown by (i) region and (ii) local authority.

Mr. Baldry: The available information represents the numbers of households for whom local authorities accepted responsibility for securing permanent accommodation, under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and the Housing Act 1985. Estimates of the total number of persons in these households are not available centrally.

The information for England is as follows:

Year	Households accepted	Percentage increase/ decrease
1979	55,530	—
1980	60,400	+8·7
1981	66,990	+10·9
1982	71,620	+6·9
1983	75,470	+5·4
1984	80,500	+6·7
1985	91,010	+13·1
1986	100,490	+10·4
1987	109,170	+8·6
1988	113,770	+4·2
1989	122,180	+7·4
1990	140,350	+14·9
1991	145,140	+3·4

A new reporting system was introduced for non-metropolitan districts from the fourth quarter of 1980 and for the other authorities from the third quarter of 1982. As a result figures for 1979 to 1982 are not strictly comparable with those for later periods.

From the second quarter of 1991 the definition of acceptances was altered to exclude intentionally homeless and all the figures have been adjusted to the new basis.

Regional estimates on the old basis for each quarter of 1984 and 1985 appear in table 1 of "Homeless Households Reported by Local Authorities in England: Supplementary Tables". Results for subsequent quarters of 1986 to 1990 inclusive appear in table 1 of various issues of "Local Authorities' Actions Under 'the Homelessness Provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England, Results for . . . Quarter 19 . . ., Supplementary Tables".

Regional estimates on the new basis for 1991 appear in the information bulletin "Households Found Accommodation Under the Homelessness Provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England: Statistics for the First Quarter of 1992". It is not appropriate to calculate percentage changes between figures on the old basis and the new basis. Estimates adjusted to the new basis, from 1984 onwards, will be published later this year.

Copies of all these publications and the list of relevant issues for regional estimates for 1986 to 1990 are available in the Library.

I have also placed in the Library tables giving the information actually reported by individual local authorities in England for each year from 1981 to 1991 inclusive. Information for the years 1979 and 1980 is available in edition no. 54, table 14, edition no. 61, table 11, and edition no. 62, table 13, of "Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library.

For information about Wales and Scotland I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland.

Fire Regulations

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions planning appeals to his Department under section 13 of the Hampshire Act 1983 have not been upheld; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Since 1 November 1990 my Department has received six appeals under section 13 of the Hampshire Act. One of these was withdrawn, one is under consideration at present and the other four appeals were upheld.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to ensure that the provisions of section 13 of the Hampshire Act 1983 with respect to fire safety in very large low-rise buildings are upheld in the planning appeal process.

Mr. Baldry: Appeals to the Secretary of State under section 13 of the Hampshire Act are not part of the planning system. They arise from the refusal of the building control authority to approve plans deposited in accordance with the requirements of the building regulations. The Secretary of State will continue to consider each case on its own merits, with the interests of the health and safety of people in and around buildings in mind.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been carried out by his Department into the effectiveness of sprinklers, fire ventilation and other fire protection measures in very large low-rise buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has carried out research over a number of years into many aspects of sprinkler performance, fire ventilation and other fire protection measures. The knowledge gained from this work has informed the recently completed review of the technical content of building regulations, and has provided the basis for most of the guidance available to designers on such systems. This guidance includes methods applicable to very large low-rise buildings. The Department will continue to support work in these areas to improve our understanding of the processes involved, and to develop and refine the guidance available to designers and enforcing authorities.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers are available to local authorities to require measures to assist fire fighters, such as sprinklers and fire ventilation in very large low-rise buildings.

Mr. Baldry: The Building Regulations 1991, made under the Building Act 1984, require provision to be made for access and facilities for the fire service. The functional requirement is set out in schedule 1 of the building regulations, under part B5. The requirements to provide adequate means of escape—B1—and to address the dangers of internal and external fire spread—B2, B3, B4—also assist fire fighters. In some parts of England and Wales local Acts contain provisions which also have a bearing on assistance to fire fighters.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek to amend the Building Regulations 1991 to require the provision of sprinklers and fire ventilation in very large low-rise buildings.

Mr. Baldry: A major review of the building regulations and associated technical guidance on fire safety has just been completed. There are no plans to amend the regulations on the lines suggested.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement regarding the appropriate fire protection measures required in very large low-rise buildings.

Mr. Baldry: The latest approved document on fire safety, published by HMSO in December 1991, gives guidance on fire protection measures appropriate to satisfy the requirements of the Building Regulations. Other Government Departments issue guidance on the measures necessary to satisfy other legislative requirements. Guidance on measures to reduce property fire losses has recently been published by the Loss Prevention Council.

Dittiscombe Equestrian Centre

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the appeal by the Dittiscombe equestrian centre, Dittiscombe, Slapton, south Devon, against the level of business rate will be heard; when it was first lodged; and what is the reason for the time taken for the hearing.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 16 June 1992]: The proposal dated 2 August 1990 was received as an appeal by the Devon valuation tribunal on 4 January 1991 and is provisionally listed for hearing on 9 November 1992.

Following revaluation on 1 April 1990, the tribunal initially received more than 10,000 list appeals. Most of these were received towards the end of that financial year and by the end of April 1992 some 4,000 had been resolved.

Valuation tribunals are independent bodies and the priority and timing of cases is primarily a matter for them. In general, tribunals are adopting a systematic approach to the settlement of cases, with a view to establishing a common level of value for classes of property in particular locations in the 1990 rating list. This means mainly concentrating on more significant cases which could have a bearing on the assessments of similar properties in the same area, and provide many ratepayers with sufficient evidence to enable them to settle their cases by agreement.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Trade Gap

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Government expects to publish their response to the second report from the Agriculture Committee of Session 1991-92, on the trade gap in food and drink; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government's response is published today, and copies are available in the Libraries of the House.

I welcome the report of the Select Committee as a valuable contribution to the debate on the trade gap. It supports the Government's view that collaboration between producers is the best way for them to produce what the market wants, and that close collaboration is also needed between producers, processors and retailers.

The Government are addressing these needs through the group marketing grant which they introduced in April. We believe that it can make a real contribution to improved marketing at home and abroad.

I am delighted that the marketing initiative is moving forward on such a broad front. Food from Britain is working with us on the group marketing grant and will certainly have a role to play in other ways too. The National Farmers Union has its own Food from the Countryside programme and regional food fairs are planned. Several food and retail companies are sponsoring the three-year initiative with Strathclyde university on improving opportunities for British suppliers. there has never been so much interest in this subject, and I am sure that working together we can make a real impact.

The response acknowledges that the Committee and the Government are in agreement that intra Community trade in agriculture produce should be conducted on a fair footing. However, the Government do not accept that the taxpayer should offset the cost of national food safety or animal welfare measures, since these are ultimately of benefit to the industries concerned. For the same reason the Government do not feel that an increase in its contribution to Food from Britain is justified at present. The Government agrees with the importance which the Select Committee places on marketing and collaboration.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will now review his policy about not slaughtering the offspring of BSE-infected cattle;

(2) if he will make available in the Library the results of the research funded by his Ministry into the genetic link with BSE conducted by Dr. Wijeratne and that carried out by his Central Veterinary Laboratory into the same topic; and whether he will convene the Tyrrell committee to assess the findings of this research.

Mr. Gummer: The work by Dr. Wijeratne and colleagues into a genetic susceptibility to BSE is not complete. When it is, the outcome will be published without delay.

The Tyrrell committee is well aware of this research and of progress on it. Preliminary results so far show only that in one breed there appear to be some cows with an inherited increased susceptibility to BSE. This does not mean that BSE is a genetic disease. In addition, increased susceptibility is irrelevant if an animal is not exposed to infection.

The Government's policy of slaughtering affected animals and banning the feeding of ruminant derived protein is already designed to ensure that cattle are not exposed to the source of infection. All the evidence indicates that other possible sources of infection, particularly maternal or horizontal infection, will have little or no effect on the epidemic. There is therefore no justification for a calf slaughter policy or further control measures.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many times the Tyrrell committee has met each year since 1989.

Mr. Gummer: Seven times in 1990, six in 1991 and on three occasions so far this year.

Farmers Charter

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has produced a charter for farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall be announcing shortly my Department's contribution to the implementation of the principles of the citizens charter, for the benefit of consumers as well as farmers.

Whaling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 642, when he expects to announce Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the French proposal for an Antarctic whale sanctuary; whether he is awaiting scientific advice on that proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The French proposal for an Antarctic whale sanctuary addresses a number of issues to the International Whaling Commission's scientific committee, now in session at Glasgow. This is an interesting proposal; we shall need to consider the scientists' advice on it when available; and we will take full part in the IWC's deliberations about it at the 44th annual meeting in Glasgow from 29 June to 3 July.

CAP Reform

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for CAP reform during the British presidency of the EC.

Mr. Curry: We aim to carry forward the process of CAP reform by ensuring, in particular, that all necessary action is taken to implement the measures agreed on 21 May and by seeking agreement on reform of the EC regimes for sugar and wine, on consolidation of the rules on milk quotas and on a new agrimonetary system.

Eggs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what egg marketing regulations are applicable in England and Wales for the sale of duck and goose eggs; if the sale of these eggs is affected by any European Community regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Duck and goose eggs are outside the scope of the EC regulations on egg marketing standards. There are no United Kingdom marketing regulations relating to the sale of duck and goose eggs.

Compensation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in establishing regional quantities for determining compensation in the arable sector and for the beef special premium.

Mr. Curry: In the arable sector, the area on which cereals, oilseeds, protein crops and set-aside payments are made will be reduced in-year and an additional, uncompensated set-aside requirement will be imposed the following year if the regional base area is exceeded. The regional base area will be equal to the average of cereals, oilseeds and protein production and set-aside for 1989, 1990 and 1991. Regional boundaries will be established once the necessary Commission implementing regulations have been agreed.

Beef special premium payments will be reduced if, in respect of applications for the premium payment on young animals, the regional ceiling is exceeded. In determining the level of regional ceilings, member states may take the number of animals on which premium was claimed in 1990, 1991 and 1992. The make-up of regions and the choice of reference year will be decided once implementing regulations have been agreed.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the number and efficacy of non-organophosphorous sheep dips.

Mr. Soames: Three non-organophosphorous sheep dip products are currently licensed but, along with other sheep dips, these are currently subject to review by the Veterinary Products Committee. Data have been requested from the industry, and these must demonstrate that modern standards of safety, quality and efficacy are met before reviewed licences can be issued.

Fur Farms

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ban fur factory farming of wild animals.

Mr. Soames: The European Commission is expected to issue proposals for Community controls on the keeping of animals for fur.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he intends to take to ensure there are proper slaughterhouse facilities in the New Forest area, following the closure of the last slaughterhouse in that area as a result of EC directives.

Mr. Soames: The Government have no reason to doubt that there will be sufficient slaughtering capacity, either nationally or locally, following implementation of the EC single market requirements on 1 January 1993. It will be for individual slaughterhouse operators to take commercial decisions whether to upgrade their premises to meet the new requirements, which the Government fully support.

Animal Transport

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps he plans to take to ensure that, as required by article 5.2 of the new EC directive on the protection of animals during transport (19/628/EEC), itineraries are drawn up for animal transport journeys exceeding 24 hours to ensure that the animals are rested and given food and water;

(2) whether he will require his officials from 1 January 1993 to ensure that the animal welfare requirements of EC directive on the protection of animals during transport (91/628/EEC) have been taken into account before issuing health certificates under directive 90/425/EEC for animals being transported from the United Kingdom to other countries.

Mr. Soames: Proposals for the implementation of directive 91/628 are under consideration and will be issued to interested organisations for comment. Further decisions remain to be taken in the Community on the resting, feeding and watering of animals at appropriate intervals and on the arrangements for certification.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Heald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Agriculture Council held on 15 and 16 June.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting of the Council together with my hon. Friend the Minister of State in my Department.

As regards rabies, strict conditions were agreed for the commercial import of dogs and cats into the United Kingdom from 1 July 1994. Imports will be limited to registered traders, and involve vaccination and a blood test to authenticate its success; tight controls will be imposed on the origin, transport, destination and identification of the animals concerned. These arrangements are at least as strict as our present quarantine arrangements. It was also agreed that if any proposal is made to change quarantine requirements for pets it must provide at least the same level of protection as for traded animals. This represents a most satisfactory result on what was potentially one of the most serious problems of the single market.

The Council adopted a directive on milk hygiene which sets strict standards for production and trade in milk and milk products. This represents a further useful step towards the single market. However, allowance is also made for the manufacture of products with traditional characteristics such as soft cheeses. This responds entirely satisfactorily to concerns that were widely expressed that the directive could render such products unmarketable.

The Council discussed certain details of the CAP reform package agreed last month. I stressed there could be no question of amending that agreement to provide concessions for certain countries. Implementing texts are expected to be adopted at the next meeting of the Council which will now start on 30 June.

SCOTLAND

Learning Difficulties

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been allocated in joint finance money to the health service in Scotland; and what proportion has been spent on projects for people with learning disabilities.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not held centrally. Revenue expenditure allocations to health boards are not earmarked for specific purposes and it is for health boards themselves to determine how much will be spent on joint finance projects.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by local authority the current percentage rate of community charge outstanding in respect of the uniform business rate.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not held centrally.

Kingston Bridge, Glasgow

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the daily vehicle capacity for which the Kingston bridge, Glasgow, was designed; and what is the latest available estimate of daily vehicle usage.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The anticipated daily vehicle flows and current estimated daily vehicle usage at the Kingston bridge, Glasgow are matters for Strathclyde regional council as the local roads authority responsible for the bridge.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

Mr. Lang: I am currently considering the market testing programme for my Department.

Football Grounds

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will allow standing room to be retained at Scottish football grounds.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Gallie) on 4 June 1992 at columns 627-28.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of local authorities qualifying for housing support grant and the total housing support grant expenditure expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) at 1990-91 prices; and if he will provide a breakdown for each of the local authorities in receipt of housing support grant for each year since 1979, inclusive.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The housing support grant payable to individual local authorities in each financial year since 1979-80, expressed in cash terms and in real terms at 1990-91 prices is shown in the tables:

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to announce the names of the committee that will examine possible changes in pension law.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to make an announcement soon.

Benefits

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the (a) administrative costs, (b) benefit expenditure and (c) administrative expenditure as a proportion of expenditure, for (i) supplementary benefit and (ii) single payments for the last three years of their operation.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table:

£ million

	Year
	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
(a) Administrative costs[1 2]	839	929	1,106

(c) (a) as a percentage of total expenditure	10·2	10·4	12·2

[1] Supplementary benefit and single payments.
[2] Estimate.

Single Payments

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number and percentage of eligible applicants who were awarded single payments in the last three years of their operation; and if he will provide a breakdown by (a) region and (b) DSS office.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Single payments could be awarded to people entitled to supplementary benefit. National figures for the number of payments made in each year, and the total number of people receiving supplementary benefit is in the table.

The number of people who received awards is likely to be significantly lower than the number of payments in any given year, since any one person may have received more than one award.

Similar information for each office can be derived from information held in the Library.

	Number of payments (000)	Number of recipients of supplementary benefit (million)
1985-86	4,375	4·8
1986-87	4,230	5·1
1987-88	2,750	5·0

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of claims for single payments which were initially rejected by DSS offices which were the subject of awards following appeal for the last three years of its operation.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table.

Single payments awarded following Social Security Appeal Tribunal hearings

	Number
1986	13,920
1987	20,866
1988	31,034

Social Fund

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure of providing (a) maternity payments, (b) funeral expenses and (c) cold weather payments for the past three years expressed (i) in cash terms, (ii) in cash terms at 1990-91 prices and (iii) as a percentage of total social security expenditure; and if he will provide a breakdown by (1) region and (2) local DSS office.

Mr. Scott: Not all the information requested is readily available and it could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost. Such information as is available will be placed in the Library shortly.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department is taking to draw the social fund to the attention of those it has identified as likely to be applicants; and what is the total expenditure involved.

Mr. Scott: Information about the Fund is included in general guides to social security published by the Department. There are also two specific leaflets on the fund, numbered SFL2 and SB16. These leaflets have been revised and clarified recently. It is not possible to isolate expenditure on the social fund from other departmental publicity spending.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has to alter the eligibility criteria used in making discretionary awards under the social fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 8 June at columns 6-8.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are (a) the administrative costs, (b) benefit expenditure and (c) administrative costs as a proportion of expenditure, for (i) the social fund, (ii) income support and (iii) income support and social fund combined, for each of the social fund's operation;

(2) what was the total expenditure of administering the social fund expressed (a) in cash terms, (b) at 1990-91 prices and (c) as a percentage of gross social fund expenditure; and if he will provide a breakdown by (i) region and (ii) local DSS office;

(3) what is the total expenditure of the social fund expressed as a percentage of (a) total social security expenditure and (b) total running costs for each year of its operation.

Mr. Scott: Information on social security expenditure and administration costs for 1988-89 to 1990-91 is in the Library. Details of social fund administration costs for 1991-92 are not yet available. Information about administrative costs by region or DSS local office is not available.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications initially rejected by (a) social fund officers and (b) social fund inspectors were the subject of awards following review for each year of its operation; and if he will provide a breakdown by (i) region and (ii) local DSS office.

Mr. Scott: The information requested about social fund officers' decisions is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Regarding social fund inspectors' decisions, I am informed by the social fund commissioner that information by each local office is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The table summarises the data collected by DSS region.

Region	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	[1]1991-92
London North	—	0	10	25
London South	—	1	8	9
Midlands	—	3	3	14
North East	—	3	17	26
North West	—	1	11	26
Scotland	—	0	9	47
Wales and South West	—	1	8	21

[1] Data for 1991-92 is provisional.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total budget for (a) the social fund, (b) budgeting loans, (c) crisis loans and (d) community care grants and the percentage of each budget which was actually spent for each year of its operation; and if he will provide a breakdown by (i) region and (ii) local DSS office.

Mr. Scott: Information on social fund allocations and expenditure is in the Library. The allocations for loans are not subdivided for budgeting and crisis loans.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that social fund applicants and potential applicants are made aware of the role of the social fund inspectors;

(2) what is the estimated cost and time scale for implementing any planned improvements to the computer system which are deemed necessary for the efficient operation of the social fund and the production of reliable performance data;

(3) what is the level of departmental manpower absorbed by the social fund expressed (a) in numbers and (b) as a percentage of total departmental manpower for each year of its operation.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Loans and Grants

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants were refused (a) budgeting loans, (b) crisis loans and (c) community care grants for each year of their operation; and if he will provide a breakdown by (i) region and (ii) local DSS office.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the performance targets in working days which were set for (a) budgeting loans, (b) crisis loans and (c) community care grants and the actual average clearance times achieved in each of the years for which information is available; and if he will provide a breakdown by region.

Mr. Scott: Performance targets and clearance of social fund applications are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will change the procedures of his Department in respect of mortgage interest payments, so that mortgage lenders receive payments by the due date, instead of one month in arrears to prevent mortgagors being threatened with repossession.

Mr. Burt: The Council of Mortgage Lenders gave an assurance last December that lenders would not seek possession if the mortgage interest due was paid direct from income support. The present direct payment scheme began on 25 May.

Mortgage payments are usually made at the end of each calendar monthly period. Similarly, the direct payment of the income mortgage interest allowance is made to lenders at the end of each four-weekly period. While the payment date may be changed, that of itself would not have the adverse effect suggested. Consequently, we see no reason to change the procedures.

Priority Groups

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to ensure greater consistency within and between local DSS offices in the treatment of priority groups.

Mr. Scott: Social fund officers are already provided with a framework of directions and guidance which allows them to meet highest priority needs whenever they occur. Copies are available in the Library.

HEALTH

HIV Statistics

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been (a) tested and (b) proven to be HIV positive in the Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool health authority areas in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. Sackville: Records are not routinely kept by district health authorities of the total numbers of people tested for HIV and a detailed breakdown is therefore not available. In respect of Hartlepool, Sunderland, Durham, North West Durham and South West Durham health authorities, 23 individuals have been reported as infected with HIV to the Public Health Laboratory Service's communicable disease surveillance centre since April 1988; 14 of these were in the 12 months to March 1992. The AIDS (Control) Act provides that where the number of newly infected HIV persons is fewer than 10 the district health authority is not required to provide numbers.

Heart Disease

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what form figures exist for the incidence of coronary heart disease broken down to local authority districts or wards; and if she will publish the number of cases for both men and women in each local authority district or ward over the past five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the number of cases of coronary heart disease for both men and women for each health district within the North East Thames region over the past five years.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the incidence of heart disease in the community is not available centrally. The table shows the numbers of deaths for ischaemic heart disease in each health authority in the North East Thames region. Due to boundary changes in 1991, figures for Islington are no longer available separately.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list in rank order the incidence of coronary heart disease, as a percentage of the male and female population, of each health district in the North East Thames region; and if she will break down these figures to local authority districts or wards.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available precisely in the form requested. The table shows the death rate per head of population for each district in North East Thames regional health authority. Figures on incidence within the community are not collected centrally.

[1] Due to boundary changes in Bloomsbury and Islington Health Authorities the rates cannot be calculated for 1991.

Maternity Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conclusions she has reached as a result of her review of maternity services; and what steps she has so far taken to implement those conclusions.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will be responding to the report of the Health Select Committee on maternity services, second report, Session 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 22 May at column 306.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the progress of the research commissioned by her Department into the effects of post-abortion trauma.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department funded a major study by the Manchester research unit of the Royal College of General Practitioners into the long and short-term sequelae of abortion. The study ran from 1976 to the end of 1990. A number of papers have been either published or are in the public arena having been presented through conferences. Only one of these papers, that on the psychiatric sequelae of abortion, addressed the effects of post-abortion trauma. The paper was presented to the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and the Royal College of General Practitioners on 7 November 1990. The final conclusions of this part of the study are expected to be published later this year.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department is conducting as to the stage of development at which the unborn child experiences pain; what steps she is taking to reduce the level of pain experienced by an unborn child which is aborted; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department is not currently supporting any such research. The abortion procedure is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned in discussion with the patient.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service abortions have been performed in each year for the last 10 years; and how many applications for national health service abortions have been refused over the same period.

Mr. Sackville: The number of abortions performed in the National Health Service in England, Wales and Scotland in each of the last 10 years for which full figures are available is shown in the table. Information on the number of applications for an NHS abortion which were refused is not available centrally.

Number of National Health Service abortions England, Wales and Scotland 1981-1990

Year	Number of NHS abortions[1]
1981	72,430
1982	75,144
1983	75,694
1984	78,776
1985	80,168
1986	83,800
1987	86,828
1988	88,439
1989	89,980
1990	93,312

[1]These figures include those abortions carried out in England and Wales under an agency agreement (operations carried out in non-NHS premises on NHS patients).

Hospital Assaults

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the hospitals where (a) staff and (b) patients have been assaulted by either patients or members of the general public in the last six months; and if she will provide the statistics of these assaults.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Limbless Ex-Service Men

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will meet members of the British Limbless Ex-Sevicemen's Association to discuss her Department's guidance on priority treatment for their disabilities.

Mr. Yeo: We have no plans to meet members of the British Limbless Ex-Servicemen's Association at present.

Hospitals

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) hospitals have been closed, (b) beds have been closed, (c) hospitals have been opened and (d) beds have been opened, since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Smear Tests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the time between a smear test taking place and the result being given to the patient.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities have made significant progress in ensuring that women receive the results of a smear test within the national one month target. At December 1990, around two thirds were meeting the target, by December 1991 more than 96 per cent. of health authorities were reporting cervical smear results within one month or less. We expect regional health authorities to monitor the performance of districts to ensure this high level of performance continues.

NHS Trust Federation

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the relative roles of the National Health Service Trust Federation and regional health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service Trust Federation is a body set up by the trusts themselves to represent them. It has no statutory role.

Regional health authorities are statutory bodies which have a key strategic role in the management structure of the reformed NHS. They are the Government's agents for managing change and for ensuring the implementation of the Government's policies on health.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each major type of service and treatment provided by the national health service and indicate which of these services are provided by all district health authorities.

Mr. Sackville: It is the responsibility of each district health authority to secure a comprehensive range of services for their resident population based on a local assessment of their health needs. A list of the services provided by each of the authorities for their resident population is not held centrally.

NHS Spending

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current level of annual NHS spending as a proportion of gross domestic product excluding capital receipts from the disposal of NHS properties.

Mr. Sackville: Total United Kingdom national health service spending is estimated at 5·8 per cent. of gross domestic product for 1992-93. Excluding capital receipts the figure is estimated to be 5·7 per cent.

Human Growth Hormone

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make it her policy to continue Department of Health funding for a specialist counsellor at the Institue for Child Health for those suffering from Creutzfeld-Jakob disease;

(2) what measures she intends to take to ensure that former recipients of human growth hormone treatment will be able to obtain life assurance;

(3) whether all people who were injected with human growth hormone treatments have been contacted and made aware of the possible implications of contaminated treatment.

Mr. Yeo: In the United Kingdom and Eire 1,910 patients were treated with pituitary derived human growth hormone between 1959 and 1985 when the link with Creutzfeld-Jacob Disease—CJD—was discovered. Action taken to trace these patients has revealed that 1,777 are still alive. Of these, 1,689 are believed to be currently resident in Great Britain of whom some 1,580—over 90 per cent.—have been linked to a general practitioner's list. Efforts continue to trace the remaining patients and separate arrangements have been put in hand for tracing patients resident in Northern Ireland and Eire.

In June 1991 the Department funded a trial by the Institute of Child Health at Great Ormond Street Hospital of arrangements for notifying and counselling these patients on the risk of CJD, in consultation with their general practitioner. Regional health authorities have agreed to adopt similar procedures in notifying and counselling the remaining patients resident in their regions. The counsellors used by the regional health authorities will be trained at the Institute of Child Health. Central funding has been extended for this purpose and to enable the Institute to continue to investigate the health and welfare needs of these patients.

By now we estimate that some 500 patients have been notified and offered counselling. We have asked for reports on the progress of the counselling programme. If these indicate that obtaining life assurance is a problem, we will consider an approach to the industry.

Residential Care

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will institute a policy requiring the constant availability of beds in nursing homes for people in (a) local auhtority residential homes and (b) private residential homes.

Mr. Yeo: No. Forcing either local authorities or private home owners to keep beds empty as suggested would neither serve the interests of prospective residents nor be an efficient use of resources.

Greenwich Healthcare Trust

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will defer any decision on the Greenwich Healthcare Trust application until after the consultation on the acute services strategy for the Greenwich health district has been completed;

(2) if she will defer any decision on the Greenwich Healthcare Trust application until the long-term future of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital is known;

(3) if she will publish the business plan for the Greenwich Healthcare Trust when she receives it.

(4) if she will make it her policy to disclose any advice or comments which she receives from the South East Thames regional health authority on the Greenwich Healthcare Trust application.

Dr. Mawhinney: In reaching a decision on whether to grant trust status to Greenwich Healthcare, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will take into account the outcome of consultation on all of the relevant issues surrounding the trust application. Requests for copies of responses to consultation on the trust application should be directed to the South East Thames regional health authority. It is not our policy to publish confidential advice from regional health authorities to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. With effect from 1993-94, all established trusts will publish their annual business plans. Financial summaries produced by potential trusts are confidential. It is for the trust project team to decide whether to publish these summaries.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role her Department plays in the appointment of chief executives or general managers of national health service trusts; and what role is played by the region and the district health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regions, as co-ordinators of regional trust development programmes, are closely involved in assessing the leadership and management of proposed trusts and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, considers carefully the views of regions and districts. The appointment of chief executives of NHS trusts is a matter for the chairman and non-executives of each trust.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department gives about the reappointment of chief executives or general managers of hospitals to those positions when they become national health service trusts; and what information she has on how many have done so.

Dr. Mawhinney: The chief executive of a trust is appointed by the chairman and non-executive directors. All chief executive posts must be advertised except where the trust's project manager is appointed. The hon. Member may wish to approach trust chairmen for the additional information he requires.

Jennifer Bennett

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to reply to written representations from the Matthew Trust sent on 14 April concerning the disclosure of Miss Jennifer Bennett's identity and medical records to the press.

Mr. Sackville: We are investigating the issues raised by the Matthew Trust and will send a response as soon as possible.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

Aircraft Engines

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been commissioned into the environmental impact and property damage implications of aircraft engines capable of powering 600-seater aircraft.

Mr. Norris: There are no 600-seater aircraft yet in production. The regulatory authorities have not yet been provided with information about any such aircraft which would enable them to undertake environmental assessment. However, all new types of civil aircraft must receive a certificate of airworthiness, covering a wide range of safety and environmental standards, before they are permitted to operate.

A5-M11 Trunk Road

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the latest position as regards the consultation study by Acer Consultants Ltd. in connection with its work on the alignment of an east/west trunk route regarding the section between the A5 and the M11.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We expect to receive a report from our consultant this autumn. This will provide information about route options on which we hope to consult the public in 1993.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the first degree obtained by each of the chief executives of DVOIT and the Transport Research Agency; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded;

(2) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of DVOIT and the Transport Research Agency as agencies; and whether the cost in each case was borne by the parent department or the new agency.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The chief executives of the DVOIT agency and the Transport Research Laboratory will be writing to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the maximum salary payable, including performance related element, and the length of time of the contract, of each of the chief executives of DVOIT and the Transport Research Agency.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The chief executive of the DVOIT agency has been appointed from 1 April 1992 for five years. The maximum salary that the chief executive DVOIT agency could be paid in 1992-93 on the basis of the current scale is £46,671 but a further general increase is expected on 1 August 1992. In addition, the chief executive is eligible for special non pensionable performance related bonus payments of up to 10 per cent. of salary.

The chief executive of the Transport Research Laboratory has been appointed from 11 November 1991 for five years. The maximum salary that the executive could be paid in 1992-93 is currently £63,000. This figure is subject to annual review in the light of the Government's decisions on the recommendations of the top salaries review body for the senior open structure. In addition the chief executive is eligible for non pensionable performance related bonuses up to a maximum of 10 per cent. of salary for the years to which the bonuses relate.

Red Routes

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the additional cost of (a) initiating, (b) administering each year and (c) policing each year the scheme of red routes in London as announced on 11 June.

Mr. Norris: I expect the implementation of the red route network announced on 11 June to cost in the region of £50 million (over the next five years) and the cost of administration to be of the order of £1·5 million a year subject to variation in workload. When the system becomes fully operational the annual cost of the additional police officers and traffic wardens will be about £25 million. However, the final cost will depend on the extent to which the boroughs' future involvement in parking enforcement releases existing traffic warden resources.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements relating to regulated parking, pedestrian crossings, cycle facilities and bus lanes or bus preference traffic schemes are possible under red route legislation and not possible under other provisions for traffic and highway management.

Mr. Norris: The power for the Secretary of State to designate a coherent network across London and to ensure the co-ordinated implementation of effective measures on it.

Orbital Trunk Road, M25

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to build an outer orbital trunk road outside the M25.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None.

Colne Foulridge Bypass

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects construction of the Colne Foulridge bypass to begin.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This is Lancashire county council's scheme. Its timing is a matter for the council, although the council is hoping for exceptional central Government funding.

Selby Bypass

Mr. Michael Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress on the Selby bypass following the conclusion in 1991 of the local public inquiry into the line of the route.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The joint decision of the Secretaries of State for Transport and the Environment is awaited. I am aware of the need for an early decision, but in view of their statutory position it would be wrong for me to forecast when an announcement can be made. Of course, they have to consider all evidence before them, including the inquiry inspector's report.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what review is being undertaken of the law relating to wheel clamping of vehicles by private companies in England.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The law on wheel clamping on private land is a matter for the courts. But the recent ruling of the Scottish High Court of Judiciary will be examined carefully by my Department—with other relevant Government Departments—with a view to the position in England.

WALES

Radionuclides

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he has taken in relation to the conclusions on page seven of the report commissioned by his Department from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority on a post-Chernobyl survey of radionuclides in Wales from August to October 1986.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The report to which the hon. Gentleman refers is one of many dealing with the effects of radioactive deposition from Chernobyl within the United Kingdom as a whole. Since the accident there have been a wide range of laboratory and field studies to improve our understanding of the behaviour of the fallout from Chernobyl in the affected areas, including north Wales.

The recommendations for further work in this particular report are being followed up. The Welsh Office is currently funding a project examining the dynamics of caesium in soils in upland Wales. As part of its wide ranging research programme the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has also funded work in the migration of radiocaesium in peat, as well as into the presence of strontium 90 in crops before and after the Chernobyl accident.

Following the Chernobyl accident a comprehensive monitoring programme of all foodstuffs likely to be affected was undertaken in Wales. The results indicated that radioactivity levels were generally well below those at which action was necessary to protect the safety of the food chain—with the exception of sheepmeat from certain parts of north Wales. As a result, sheep movement and marketing restrictions remain in force.

Access to Records

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what conclusions he has reached on the implications of the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Graham Gaskin for people seeking access to personal records for which he has responsibility; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has consulted relevant agencies in Wales about how existing legislation and practice on the subject of access to social work records might need to be modified in the light of the judgment given by the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Graham Gaskin.

I am considering, together with other Ministers, what action should now be taken.

Dentistry

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the approval by his Department for the West Glamorgan family health services authority to begin the immediate checking of standards at dental surgeries in the county will include the aim of reducing the rates of cross-infection; and if this initiative will now be extended to the whole of Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The inspection of general dental practitioners premises is a matter for individual family health services authorities to decide as part of their management responsibility for general dental services. The composition of the inspection checklist is stipulated in guidance issued to FHSAs and includes consideration of cross-infection control.

Penylag County Primary School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review his financial regulations to enable the Penylag county primary school, Deeside to be extended; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: No. In accordance with practices agreed with the local authority associations it is for local authorities to determine the distribution of the resources made available to them between services and projects in the light of their view of local needs and priorities.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Penylag county primary school and meet the governors, staff and the parent-teachers association.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no present plans to do so.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will earmark cash in the Sports Council grant aid to enable the Sports Council to list the current stock of school playing fields land.

Mr. David Hunt: As indicated in the Government's policy statement "Sport and Active Recreation" published last November, I will be considering with the Sports Council for Wales whether the register of all playing fields in England currently being compiled should be extended to Wales.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what reasons the construction of the alternative feeding grounds for wading birds was omitted from the re-advertisement of the specifications of the tender to construct the proposed Cardiff bay barrage in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities dated 5 June; and what difference it made to the total estimated construction cost.

Mr. David Hunt: The construction of the alternative feeding grounds for wading birds was omitted from Cardiff Bay Development Corporation's re-advertisement since the Select Committee required the provision for the feeding grounds to be removed from the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill. The indicative value of £112 million given in the advertisement should have been reduced by the £5·7 million cost of the feeding ground to £106 million. As I indicated in my answer to the hon. Gentleman on 16 June the estimated value in the advertisement is intended to be purely indicative of the scale of the project.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what reasons it was decided to increase the volume of dredged material in the specification for the construction of the Cardiff bay barrage from 1,000,000 m^3 to 1,700,000 m^3, and for sandfill from 1,300,000 m^3 to 1,500,000 m^3 between the original advertisement in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities dated 14 November 1990 and the most recent re-advertisement dated 5 June 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: Following completion of ground investigations and detailed design of the barrage, allowance has been made for removal of all soft material from beneath the locks, sluices and Penarth Link, and removal of some soft material from beneath the embankment. This is required to avoid problems during construction and to ensure the complete structure integrity of the finished structure. It has resulted in the increases in dredging and sandfill quantities.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the increase since November 1990 in cost and in percentage terms of the proposed Cardiff bay barrage exclusive of the cost of the alternative feeding grounds.

Mr. David Hunt: If the cost of the alternative feeding grounds had been excluded from the November 1990 prequalification notice, the cost of the Cardiff bay barrage would have been £82 million at 1988-89 prices. The equivalent figure for the latest notice is £106 million at 1991-92 prices. Estimated construction costs exclusive of the alternative feeding grounds have therefore risen by £24 million or 29 per cent. over a period of some three years.

Manufacturing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what special measures he plans to encourage manufacturing industry in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Development of manufacturing industry in Wales is a high priority. A wide range of schemes is available to encourage investment, research and development, and job creation. Specific initiatives have been taken to strengthen supplier networks, encourage technology transfer and build on the record levels of inward investment that have been achieved.

Banking Jobs

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the loss of banking and finance jobs in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Employment Department figures show that between 1989 and 1991 employment in the banking, insurance and finance sector in Wales increased by almost one third to 90,000.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

War Crimes

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General how much money has been spent on investigations under the War Crimes Act 1991; and how many individual cases have been investigated.

The Attorney-General: The War Crimes Act 1991 came into effect on 9 May 1991. Costs associated with investigations in England and Wales in 1991-92 were £1,003,072. This includes running costs and direct expenditure by the CPS in providing advice and other support to the investigators. The corresponding figure for Scotland is £300,000. No individual investigations have been completed. The inquiry is focusing on the case identified in the Hetherington/Chalmers report which appear most susceptible to criminal investigation.

No figures are yet available for the expenditure in the current year.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will now indicate when the opinion of the Advocate General and the judgments of the court will be available on the case relating to Sunday trading.

The Attorney-General: The Advocate-General will give his opinion on 8 July. The court will give public notice in due course after 8 July of the date when it will give judgment.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on his attendance at the European Court of Justice on 2 June.

The Attorney-General: On 2 June the European Court of Justice heard references by English courts concerning the compatibility of the Shops Act 1950 and Community law. I addressed the court on behalf of the United Kingdom and argued that the Act was compatible with Community law.

"Final Exit"

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration the Director of Public Prosecutions is giving to instituting proceedings under section 2 of the Suicide Act 1961 against the publishers or distributors of "Final Exit"; and what criteria the Director of Public Prosecutions applies to such cases.

The Attorney-General: In December 1991 the acting director of Public Prosecutions considered a complaint relating to the distribution of "Final Exit" by Derek Humphrey. He concluded that there were no grounds for proceeding against either the publishers or distributors for an offence contrary to section 2 of the Suicide Act 1961. In reaching this decision the acting director took into account the High Court's consideration in Attorney General v. Able and Others [1984] 1 ALL ER p. 277 of the circumstances in which supply of a publication may contravene section 2. It is for the police to investigate any particular supply of "Final Exit" which might constitute an offence.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number of cases heard by each magistrates court in Greater London and Essex for each week during the past 12 months.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. However, the Home Office collects and publishes the numbers of people proceeded against annually by petty sessional division and commission of the peace area in "Criminal statistics England and Wales". The 1990 publication, the latest available, is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number of court sittings for each magistrates court in Greater London and Essex for each week during the past 12 months.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not available centrally in the form requested. The annual number of bench sittings for north-east London is 10,220 in 1990 (the latest year available) and for Essex is 10,217 in 1991. It is possible to provide the numbers of individual bench sittings only at disproportionate cost.

Small Claims Courts

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if small claims courts are required to issue documents to plaintiffs and defendants by recorded or registered post; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The county court rules 1981 require that any document which is to be served on a person should be served personally or by first class post. There is no requirement for documents to be sent by recorded or registered post.

Children

Mr. Olner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many children have been taken abroad by one parent against the wishes of the other parent in the last year of record.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No statistics are kept of the total number of children taken abroad unlawfully by one parent against the wishes of the other. However, in the year 1991, the child abduction unit of the Lord Chancellor's Department, which acts as the central authority for applications in England and Wales under the Hague convention of 1980 and the European convention of 1980, processed 108 applications involving 149 children who were said to have been wrongfully removed to other contracting states under those conventions.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Wildlife Management

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much is allocated by the Overseas Development Administration to special training programmes in wildlife management techniques and if he will break these figures down into the amounts spent on (a) annual capture and translocation, (b) management of crop-raiding animals, (c) veterinary diagnosis and management of diseases, (d) operation of culling programmes, (e) the development of village-level use of wild species, (f) management of sports hunting and other associated activities, (g) implementation of reintroduction programmes for both plants and animals and (h) programmes to exterminate damaging introduced and invasive species.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Information is not readily available in the form requested by the hon. Member. However, many of the projects ODA supports in wildlife management include elements for training for developing country personnel. Some examples include:

(i) £12 million for Kenya's protected areas Wildlife Services project to protect rare and endangered species;

(ii) £474,000 for the Zoological Society of London to protect black rhinos and other flora and fauna and prevent damage to crops and livestock by predators in the Aberdares, Kenya;

(iii) £91,000 in support of community education programme to promote conservation and sustainable resource use in Zimbabwe;

(iv) £30,000 for training and equipment for the Ecological Research Institute at Etosha, Namibia to develop remote sensing techniques for effective environment monitoring and management of wildlife parks.

We also support training in the United Kingdom on environmental subjects; of the 485 broad-based environment awards in 1990-91, 12 were for specific wildlife management training courses at a cost of approximately £140,000.

Bahrain

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid Her Majesty's Government provides for Bahrain (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage of gross national product.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Seal Pups

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Russian Government concerning slaughter of baby seal pups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Russian authorities are well aware of public concern in the United Kingdom about seal culling. The EC banned the import of harp and hooded seal pup skins in 1983. The United Kingdom persuaded the Community to make the ban indefinite in 1989.

Public Record Office

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many papers have been withdrawn from the Public Record Office by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In each of the past five years the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has temporarily recalled the following numbers of files from the Public Record Office.

	Number
1991	2,425
1990	2,113
1989	3,316
1988	3,324
1987	2,851

All Foreign and Commonwealth Office files temporarily recalled from the Public Record Office are held for the minimum period of time necessary for official business, and are returned to the Public Record Office thereafter.

Bosnia-Herzogovina

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken towards protection of the chemical plant in Tuzla, in Bosnia-Herzegovina, against the risks of war damage leading to environmental damage.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The best protection for all sites in Bosnia-Herzegovina would be a durable ceasefire. We therefore wholeheartedly support Lord Carrington's and the United Nations efforts to bring this about.

Slovenia

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to ensure that United Nations sanctions against Serbia do not harm the economy or the people of Slovenia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As a United Nations member state, Slovenia has a legal obligation to implement the sanctions imposed on Serbia and Montenegro by Security Council Resolution 757. It is for the Slovenian authorities to take steps, consistent with this resolution, to protect the interests of their economy and people should they be affected by Slovenian implementation of the sanctions.

Patricia Cahill

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to secure the release of Patricia Cahill from prison in Thailand.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British embassy in Bangkok submitted Patricia Cahill's petition for a pardon from His Majesty the King of Thailand to the Thai Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 4 May 1992. The embassy strongly supported the petition on the grounds of Miss Cahill's youth and immaturity at the time the offence was committed.

Entry Applications

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for entry clearance at the deputy high commission in Karachi have been outstanding for more than one month.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 12 June 1992]: There are 745 applications which have been outstanding for more than one month. Of these, 528 are non-settlement cases where the post requires further information or the applicants have failed to attend for interview. Of the remaining 217 settlement cases, 50 have been referred to the Home Office for decision, 82 applicants are waiting first interview, and 85 are applicants who have been interviewed but from whom further documents are required.

EDUCATION

School Toilets

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will update the 1977 survey conducted by his Department and the Welsh Office on how many schools in England and Wales have outside toilets in use by pupils.

Mr. Forth: I have no plans at present to update the information contained in the 1977 "A Study of School Building" which gave the number of schools with outside toilets on a sample basis.

School Governing Bodies

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to strengthen the representative base of school governing bodies by opening up all places on every body to election by parents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: We have no plans to alter the carefully constructed balance of membership of school governing bodies established by the Education (No. 2) Act 1986.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will review the procedure for appointment of school governors by minor authorities to prevent such authorities from removing well-established school governors and replacing them with political appointees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: We have no plans to review the procedure for the appointment of school governors by minor authorities.

The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 allows those appointing governors to remove them at any time. The courts have, however, taken the view that in doing so they must act reasonably. There is therefore a remedy in law for a governor who considers that he has been unreasonably removed.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the latest figure for the cost of surplus school places for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: The average premises-related cost of maintaining a school place is estimated to be £150 a year for a primary school and £250 a year for a secondary school at 1991-92 prices. The amount that can be saved by removing surplus places will, however, vary considerably according to the particular circumstances.

School Repairs

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the differences in the arrangements for (a) aided schools and (b) county schools in using school budget money to support governors' money for paying for decorations or repairs approved for 85 per cent. grant from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: County schools are not eligible for grant from the Department for repairs or decorations. Governors of county and voluntary aided schools with delegated budgets may, subject to any conditions in their LMS scheme, spend the budget share of their school as they see fit for the purposes of the school. In the voluntary aided schools, such purposes could include external repairs to school buildings, including decoration, which are their responsibility under the provisions of section 15 of the Education Act 1944 and eligible for grant.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Visits

Q8. Mr. Enright: To ask the Prime Minister when he will next pay an official visit to Kinsley.

The Prime Minister: I shall be making further visits to many parts of the country and hope to include Kinsley among them.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about ministerial responsibilities for HMSO, the Central Office of Information, Chessington Computer Centre and CCTA—the Government Centre for Information Systems.

The Prime Minister: The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (Minister of Public Service and Science) will assume responsibility for these bodies from the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The transfer of responsibility for the Central Office of Information and Her Majesty's Stationery Office will take place on Monday 22 June. The transfer of CCTA will take place once the necessary Transfer of Functions Order permits. Responsibility for Chessington Computer Centre will be transferred as soon as the administrative arrangements have been completed.

These four bodies are largely self-contained units engaged in providing services, mostly on a repayment basis, and mainly to other civil service departments and agencies. They will take their place alongside the Civil Service college, the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency and the Occupational Health Service, which are also self-contained units largely serving civil service departments and agencies and which are already the responsibility of the Chancellor of the Duchy. Bringing these seven units under one Minister is designed to improve their effectiveness and help to provide even better value for those who use those services.

Millennium Fund

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what benefits are planned to flow to London from the millennium fund.

The Prime Minister: It is far too early to say. But the millennium fund, which will commemorate the start of the 21st century, will be one of the areas funded by the national lottery.

Private Sector Forum for London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what functions will be carried out by the Private Sector Forum for London; and whether its proceedings will be subject to public scrutiny;

(2) when he intends to announce the membership of the proposed Private Sector Forum for London; and if he is inviting nominations from representative bodies in the capital.

The Prime Minister: The forum will promote London internationally as a business, tourist and cultural centre. We are still considering the detailed arrangements for the forum. We will announce our conclusions in due course.

Rail Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions he has made an official visit by train since becoming Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister: I do so when ever the opportunity arises but for practical and security reasons I am unable to travel often by train.

Royal British Legion (Training Centre)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what is the most appropriate Department to sponsor the Royal British Legion's bid to PERIFRA II for the establishment of a training centre in Tidworth for providing specific training for members of the armed forces and their families, so as to prepare them for continuing careers in civilian life; what action he will take in consultation with the Royal British Legion; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 June 1992]: The aims of the British Legion proposal are to provide employment opportunities and training for the wives and dependants of service personnel, for ex-service personnel, and for the local community in Tidworth. The Ministry of Defence has the matter under consideration.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to prevent a reporting accountant acting for debenture holders from acting as a receiver.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no such plans.

Compact Discs

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received regarding the pricing of compact discs.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department has received a small number of letters about the price of compact discs and other aspects of the market for recorded music in the course of the last few months. The Office of Fair Trading has also received correspondence on this issue and is keeping the market under review.

Aerospace Exports

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the value of exports by the aerospace industry to Britain for each of the years from 1979, giving the financial value under the headings of airframe, engines etc.

Mr. Needham: The available information is given in the following table. Figures for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Vehicles

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the value and numbers of motor cars, vans and lorries (a) imported and (b) exported for each of the years from 1979.

Mr. Needham: The information is given in the table.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Telecommunications Council on 5 June.

Mr. Leigh: The principal item for discussion was a proposal for a Council decision on an action plan for the introduction of advanced television services in Europe. The action plan proposes a subsidy of up to 850 mecu to accelerate development of a market for wide-screen and high-definition television services broadcast by satellite or cable and using MAC (Multiplex Analogue Components) transmission standards. The United Kingdom supported by several other member states, rejected the sum of 850 mecu as unacceptably high. The United Kingdom further stated that a convincing business case for any subsidy had yet to be presented. No Council conclusions were drawn from the discussion. Consideration of the action plan will continue.

The otherwise light agenda included a brief discussion on the long awaited postal services green paper. The United Kingdom strongly welcomed its stated objective of seeking the maximum deregulation consistent with the maintenance of affordable efficient universal letter delivery services. The Council also adopted the open network provision (ONP) directive on leased lines and ONP recommendations on integrated services digital networks (ISDN) and packet switched data services. A resolution on ISDN was also adopted.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in the work of the renewable energy advisory group.

Mr. Eggar: In August 1991, the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy, the hon. Colin Moynihan, announced the formation of a ministerial advisory group to spearhead the Government's review of renewable energy strategy. Since then the group has considered evidence submitted by a wide range of interested external parties, as well as drawing upon a technical assessment being conducted by the energy technology support unit.

The group will complete its work under the chairmanship of Dr. Martin Holdgate, the Director General of the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources. I look forward to receiving the report from the group in the autumn and I expect it to be published.

Environmental Incentives

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money has been allocated under the Better Environmental Awards for Industry scheme in each year since its establishment.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The scheme is run by the Royal Society of Arts. My Department has made grants towards the RSA's scheme costs as follows:

1988-89	25,000
1989-90	29,200
1990-91	33,000
1991-92	150,000

The Department acted as a promoter of the Better Environment Awards for Industry scheme in its first year, 1987, but made no grant in that year towards scheme costs.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Potato Marketing

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his European counterparts regarding potato marketing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: None. We shall do so once the European Commission makes its proposals for a common régime, expected shortly.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the potato marketing system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have received a number of representations both for and against continuation of the existing arrangements. We shall not take a decision about the future of the potato marketing scheme until the European Commission publishes its proposals for a common regime for potatoes.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the first degree obtained by the chief executives of ADAS and the Central Science Laboratory; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. Curry: The chief executive of ADAS was awarded a graduateship from the Royal Institute of Chemistry, equivalent to a first class honours degree in chemistry. The chief executive of the Central Science Laboratory obtained a first class honours degree in biochemistry from University college, London.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the maximum salary payable, including performance-related element, and the length of time of the contract of the chief executives of ADAS and the Central Science Laboratory.

Mr. Curry: The chief executive of ADAS was appointed in June 1991 and the chief executive of the Central Science Laboratory (CSL) in May 1991, each for a period of five years. They receive the standard civil service pay at grade 2 and grade 3 respectively. Neither participates in civil service performance pay. Instead, both are eligible for an annual, non-pensionable performance bonus, linked to the achievement of predetermined targets, of up to 12·5 per cent. of salary at the end of the financial year. The maximum payable to the chief executive of ADAS in 1992-93 would therefore be £73,125, while for the chief executive of CSL the 1992-93 maximum would be £57,713.

Sheep and Beef Quotas

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set up an agency to administer sheep and beef quotas, to provide opportunities for new entrants and to avoid unused quotas in less favoured areas.

Mr. Curry: Decisions on the administration of quotas in the beef and sheep sectors will be taken following the adoption of detailed implementing rules by the EC Commission. These rules are expected to include provision for new entrants and for unused quota not to be lost.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set up a procedure to arbitrate on special cases involving beef and sheep quotas which acquire a significant capital value when such quotas are transferred, sold, changed, or when the farm's ownership or management changes, or its operations cease.

Mr. Curry: I secured provision in the agreement on beef and sheep quotas for the specific problems linked to the transfer of quota by tenants to be addressed in the detailed Community implementing rules.

Beef Special Premium

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will apply the 90-head limit on the beef special premiums per age group of animals, and not on a per farm basis.

Mr. Curry: The way in which the 90-head limit applies will depend upon the precise wording of regulations implementing the reform package on beef. This has not yet been agreed.

Environmental and Forestry Schemes

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to make the maximum possible use of the environmental and forestry schemes which form part of the CAP reform package.

Mr. Curry: We welcome the positive environmental aspects of the CAP reform agreement. We have a year to draw up our implementation plans for both the agri-environment and forestry measures and we are considering how best to respond to the new regulations.

Companion Animals

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who will be in charge of checking and authorising the entry procedures of companion animals entering the United Kingdom after 1 January 1993 at the port of entry.

Mr. Soames: Arrangements for the legal importation of companion animals have to be made in advance, and so are not dependent on controls or checks at the port of entry. Selective customs intervention which will continue after January 1993 will maintain the effectiveness of controls on illegal imports.

Set-aside Schemes

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what use non-saleable crops are likely to be permitted under the new set-aside proposals; and when he expects detailed conditions to be published by the relevant authority that will determine environmental options available to national Governments.

Mr. Curry: I hope that the draft legal texts implementing the Council agreement will be adopted this month. The Commission will then have to table detailed implementing regulations and proposals on the use of set-aside land to grow industrial crops. Until these are in place, it is not possible to provide authoritative guidance about national management conditions or the precise range of crops that might be permitted on land set-aside under the new arable regime.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 11 June, Official Report, column 274, on set-aside, what environmental conditions he considers to be vital elements for the new set-aside arrangements agreed in the common agricultural policy reform package in May.

Mr. Gummer: The appropriate environmental conditions will vary depending on the individual circumstances of each member state. The most important factors are to ensure that set-aside land is properly managed and that the management conditions offer scope for it to be used in ways which will benefit the environment. We shall be developing our own national requirements in the light of these factors.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is investigating the possibility of issuing scanning equipment to detect the onset of BSE in cattle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Scanning by nuclear magnetic resonance has been experimentally applied to laboratory animals incubating spongiform encephalopathy. But this technique does not at the moment appear to represent a practicable means of diagnosing BSE under field conditions.

International Whaling Commission

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will name the members of the British delegation to the forthcoming International Whaling Commission meeting in Glasgow.

Mr. Gummer: The United Kingdom delegation will comprise 13 members. It will be led by Mr. A. R. Burne, the United Kingdom Commissioner to the International Whaling Commission, his deputy will be Mr. B. S. Edwards. The delegation will also include a number of advisers, as well as representatives of the non-governmental organisations Care for the Wild (Dr. W. Jordan), the World Wide Fund for Nature (Mr. J. Martin-Jones) and the Environmental Investigation Agency (Dr. R. Reeve), all belonging to the Cetacean Group of Wildlife Link.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Stamp Duty

Mr. Channon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the reasons for his decision not to extend stamp duty relief on home purchases.

Mr. Nelson: When my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced the increase in the stamp duty threshold last December, he made it clear that it was a temporary measure for eight months to help bring forward transactions in the housing market. As I explained in the debate on Second Reading of the Finance Bill on 2 June, Official Report, col 770, the cost of any extension of the threshold increase would be substantial and would make it more difficult to meet our public expenditure priorities.

Mr. Moate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the actual revenue that will be foregone in 1992-93 financial year as a result of the temporary arrangements for the relief from stamp duty of property conveyances up to £250,000 in value; what is his estimate of the likely yield from such stamp duties in the year 1992-93 once the temporary relief is ended; and what is the likely yield from properties valued at more than £250,000 in the current financial year.

Mr. Nelson: The estimated cost in 1992-93 of the temporary increase in the stamp duty threshold from £30,000 to £250,000 is £290 million. The forecast yield in 1992-93 from stamp duty on land and property below the temporary threshold which becomes chargeable from 20 August is £370 million. The yield in 1992-93 if the threshold were £250,000 throughout the year would be about £300 million. Not all of this will necessarily come from properties valued at more than £250,000. Duty on the grant of a new lease is charged by reference to the premium and the rent payable.

During the debate on the Finance Bill on 2 June I referred to the total yield from stamp duty on houses amounting to almost £1·4 billion. It may be helpful if I clarify that the total yield of all stamp duty in 1992-93 is estimated to be £1·5 billion, whereas the yield in respect of land and property in a normal year would be almost £1 billion.

Overseas Pensions

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what regulations govern the payment of taxation on pensions paid from abroad to residents of the United Kingdom;

(2) whether people living in the United Kingdom who are in receipt of pensions from overseas are liable to taxation.

Mr. Dorrell: The general position is that those who are resident for tax purposes in this country are liable to tax on pensions which arise overseas, subject to a statutory deduction of one-tenth. In some cases, for example those who are not domiciled in this country, the one-tenth deduction does not apply and the liability is determined by the amount of the overseas pension which is remitted to this country. Certain overseas pensions, for example German and Austrian pensions payable to victims of Nazi persecution, are statutorily exempt from tax. The relevant legislation for these provisions is in sections 19, 58, 65, 68 and 330, Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988.

Relief may also be due under the terms of a double taxation agreement. This will depend on the precise terms of the agreement between the United Kingdom and the country from which the pension is paid.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the number of pensioners in the United Kingdom in receipt of pensions from the United States of America; and what is the total sum of money involved.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not available.

Inland Revenue Interviews

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place a copy of the Inland Revenue manual "Accounts Investigation Interviews", in the Library.

Mr. Dorrell: I have done so.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the yield of restricting (a) the personal tax allowance, (b) the married couple's allowance and (c) the age allowances and the major tax reliefs to the basic rate of tax in 1992-93.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest estimates of the direct revenue yields in a full year with the 1992-93 levels of allowances and tax rates are as follows:

	£ million
Personal tax allowances (excluding married couple's allowance)	1,100
Married couple's allowance	340
Age allowances[1]	nil
Relief on contributions to personal pensions[2]	[3]170
Relief on employee's contributions to occupational pension schemes	290

[1]The higher levels of the age-related personal and married couple's allowances given to those aged 65 and over subject to the income limit.

[2]Including relief for retirement annuity premia and free standing additional voluntary contributions.

[3]This estimate is subject to a wide margin of error.

No account has been taken of possible behavioural changes resulting from such restrictions.

Inheritance Tax (Exemption)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how often his Department carries out monitoring of land where agreements have been reached on the granting of exemptions of inheritance tax for public access; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Regular monitoring of undertakings given in return for the conditional exemption of land from inheritance tax is carried out, on behalf of Inland Revenue, by the appropriate heritage advisory agency. As part of the regular monitoring, owners are required to submit an annual report to the agency. In addition the Inland Revenue separately review all such cases at five yearly intervals.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the number of agreements for the exemption of inheritance tax to granting public access that have been broken for each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The appropriate heritage advisory agencies monitor the operation of undertakings on public access. Any issues arising are resolved in discussion between the agencies and landowners. Where issues could not be resolved in this fashion, the agencies would notify the Inland Revenue. To date there has been no occasion on which they have had to do this.

If a land owner breaks an undertaking given in respect of conditionally exempt land, inheritance tax is chargeable on the current value of the property. This provides a powerful incentive to honour the terms of the undertaking.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conditions are imposed on the length of time from agreement on exemptions on inheritance tax for the granting of public access to land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Public access to land which has been conditionally exempted from inheritance tax is required as soon as detailed negotiations have been completed.

Auditing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 11 June, Official Report, columns 233-34, what are the criteria on which the decision is taken to propose provisions for the auditing of non-departmental public bodies by (a) the Comptroller and Auditor General and (b) private accountancy practices; what evaluation has been carried out of the respective merits of the two kinds of audit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Comptroller and Auditor General is normally appointed auditor for non-departmental public bodies which are wholly or mainly financed from public funds, except in the case of bodies whose operations are of a commercial nature and where it is appropriate for the audit to be carried out by private sector auditors qualified under the Companies Act. In the latter case it is usual to provide for the Comptroller and Auditor General to have a right of inspection of the books and records of the company.

Betting Duty

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the loss to tax revenue in the current financial year of the reduction in pools betting duty which preceded the setting up of the Foundation for Sport and the Arts.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 16 June 1992]: The cost is estimated to be £20 million in 1992-93.

Benefits and Expenses

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the estimated number of taxpayers above the current threshold for P11Ds and below the current threshold for the last available figures.

Mr. Dorrell [pursuant to his reply, 8 June 1992, Official Report, column 21]: Unfortunately the estimates given related to numbers of taxpaying employees whose total income was above the current threshold for P11Ds and whose total income was below it. The P11D threshold is applied to earnings, including benefits in kind. About 12·6 million taxpaying employees have earnings above the threshold and 5·8 million have earnings below it. The estimate of 0·8 million taxpaying directors is unaffected.

SCOTLAND

Modern Languages

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make resources available to regional and island education authorities in order to increase the teaching of modern languages in primary schools; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will give for regional and island education authorities, the cost of introducing the teaching of modern languages in primary schools; and if he will make a statement;

(3) by which year he expects the teaching of modern languages in primary schools to be universally available throughout Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Foreign language teaching will be made available in the curriculum of all Scottish primary schools within the life-time of this Parliament. Plans to implement this policy are now being prepared and a further announcement will be made in due course.

Physical Education

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to reclassify physical education as a practical subject in Scottish secondary schools.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is the responsibility of local authorities, in consultation with headteachers, to determine the deployment of teaching staff in circumstances which may call for formation of smaller groups for certain purposes. Development of the school curriculum may mean that some classes formerly regarded as non-practical may now contain practical elements; the converse may also be true. The most recent statistics on average class sizes in physical education are set out in SOED Statistical Bulletin C7/1992/3 issued in February this year, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Sir Hector Monro: The director and chief executive of the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency, Dr. Robert K. M. Hay gained a first-class honours degree in chemistry from the university of Aberdeen in 1967.

Golf

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to promote Scotland worldwide as the home of the sport of golf; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 June 1992]: I have today written to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the House Library.

Forests

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to promote the creation of forest reserves in areas where less than 20 per cent. of the original forest remains, and to surround such areas with tracts of modified forests.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 15 June 1992]: The Government attach considerable importance to the conservation of the remaining ancient and semi-natural woodlands in Britain. These woodlands are protected by the felling controls in the Forestry Act 1967, as strengthened in 1985, and the Forestry Commission offers grants and guidance to encourage their effective management. In addition, woodlands which are sites of special scientific interest are protected under the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. These measures are proving effective and we are not convinced that further initiatives of the kind proposed by the hon. Member are needed.

Cancer

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the average cancer mortality rates in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 12 June 1992]: The figures requested are given in the table.

Malignant neoplasm (ICD[1] 140-208) death rates per 100,000 population

Broadleaf Plantings

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 134, concerning the planting of native broadleaf species, what information is held centrally on non-native species planted since 1984.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 16 June 1992]: Detailed information by areas and species, both for Forestry Commission planting and for private sector planting approved by the Commission for grant aid, has been held centrally on computer since May 1991. These records indicate that current broadleaved planting mainly comprises native species. Information at the same level of detail in respect of private sector planting before that date is held in individual files in the commission's local offices. There is no evidence, however, that the pattern of broadleaved planting as between native and non-native species has differed over the past few years.

Council House Building

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of council houses built in Scotland in each year since 1979; and if he will provide a breakdown by local authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 June 1992]: The information is set out in the table.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of (a) Scottish Homes and (b) new town Development corporation tenants who have (i) applied and (ii) purchased their home under the rents-to-mortgages scheme for each year of its introduction.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 June 1992]: Information on applications by and sales to tenants of Scottish Homes and the new town development corporations since the introduction of the rent-to-mortgage scheme in October 1989 is shown in the table.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Citizens Charter

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why officials of the Benefits Agency did not give their names to Mr. M C Vaughan-Chatfield when making inquiries on behalf of his wife's disability allowance; and what are the provisions of the citizens charter in this respect.

Mr. Scott: The citizens charter stated that public servants would normally be expected to wear name badges and to give their names on the telephone or in writing. The Benefit Agency's own customer charter also gave a commitment that, other than in exceptional circumstances, staff would give their names when dealing with customers. The arrangements for implementing this are currently being discussed at local level.

I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that staff do not recollect being asked for their names by Mr. Vaughan-Chatfield, although he was given them voluntarily on two occasions.

If my hon. Friend requires further information I understand Mr. Bichard would be happy to assist.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to improve the speed and efficiency of dealing with claims for, and appeals against decisions on, disability living allowances.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Access to Records

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what conclusions he has reached on the implications of the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Graham Gaskin for people seeking access to personal records for which he has responsibility; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Burt: The judgment in this case relates to the access to personal child care files held by social services authorities. However, officials in the Department are studying the judgment to establish whether it has any indirect impact on access to information held by the Department. I will write to the hon. Member when the extent of any implications has been established.

Plessey

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has had from pensioners of Plessey plc about their treatment by GEC.

Miss Widdecombe: We have received a number of representations from and on behalf of pensioners who were employed by Plessey plc prior to the companies' acquisition by GEC/Siemens in 1989. The representations concerned their occupational pension rights which are currently the subject of an agreement which is before the High Court for approval and the withdrawal of a free private health care plan which is a matter for the company as an employer, rather than for the pension scheme.

Income Support

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review income support rates to ensure that they are adequate to cover a basic standard of living.

Mr. Burt: Income support rates are reviewed each year and uprated by the Rossi index. From April this year, income support rates have been increased by 7 per cent., nearly 3 per cent. more than the RPI for the same period.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost to his Department of payments towards mortgage interest on the part of income support recipients in each of the years from 1988 to 1991; and what is his Department's estimate of the cost of such payments in the current year.

Mr. Burt: The table gives estimates from 1988 to 1990, the latest year for which information is available:

Amount included in assessments

Year	£ million

1989	353
1990	554

2. The figure for 1991 will be in the 1991 Annual Statistical Inquiry which will be published on 19 June. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of income support have been receiving amounts in respect of mortgage payments on their home in each of the years from 1988 to 1991; how many are currently receiving such assistance; and what is his Department's estimate of the number likely to be receiving such assistance in the current year.

Mr. Burt: The table gives estimates from 1988 to 1990, the latest year for which information is available.

Number of claimants receiving help with mortgage interest

1988	300,000
1989	281,000
1990	310,000

2. The figure for 1991 will be in the 1991 Annual Statistical Inquiry which will be published on 19 June. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Benefits

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give reasons for the delay in resolving the case of Mrs. D. O. (reference YB17583A).

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Family Income

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate, using the latest family expenditure survey, average equalised weekly income (a) before housing costs, and (b) after housing costs.

Mr. Burt: The latest family expenditure survey data to be processed to yield figures in the form requested are those for 1988 and 1989. The results will be presented in the next edition of "Households Below Average Income" which we expect to be ready for publication in July. Copies of this publication will be available in the Library.

Repossessions

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the number of income support recipients who ceased to qualify for contributions towards the cost of their mortgage interest payments as a consequence of their home being repossessed in each of the years from 1988 to 1991; and how many are estimated to be in that position in the current year.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not held. Under the Social Security (Mortgage Interest Payments) Act 1992 help with mortgage interest will in the future be paid automatically to qualifying lenders. The Council of Mortgage Lenders has given an assurance that it will not seek possession when the mortgage interest due is covered by direct payment.

Maxwell Pension Funds

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis he reached the decision that £2·5 million would be sufficient to make good Maxwell pension losses until their funds' assets are unfrozen.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department keeps in close touch with the trustees of Maxwell pension funds to ensure that we have the most up to date information about the state of the schemes. The temporary emergency funding of up to £2·5 million will help trustees maintain payments to pensioners who would otherwise have a reduced pension or no pension over the next few months while frozen assets are being released and progress is made in restoring and obtaining other funds.

Publicity Spending

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 481, if he will make a statement on the differences between the estimated and actual outturn for publicity spending in 1991-92.

Mr. Burt: The difference of £1·061 million resulted from a reduction in planned campaign activity during the year.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 489, if he will make a statement on the variations in the estimated publicity spending of the Benefits Agency as announced in April and November 1991 and the outturn figure.

Mr. Burt: The publicity budget of the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member shortly and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the publicity spending of the Benefits Agency during 1990-91.

Mr. Burt: The publicity budget of the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member shortly and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

EMPLOYMENT

Defence Industries

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what policies she has formulated to retrain and redeploy the skills of those in the south west in general and Torridge and West Devon in particular who are affected adversely by the decline of defence-associated industries.

Mr. McLoughlin: There is a range of programmes and services available through the Employment Department, employment service, and training and enterprise councils (TECs) to help unemployed people find new jobs, retrain or set up their own businesses. These measures are available to former employees of all sectors, including defence, in the south west as elsewhere.

Devon and Cornwall TEC has established operation "Opus", a partnership between it, the employment service and others to give advice and help in defence redundancy situations.

The Employment Department has published an information pack, "Local Action for Employment Tackling Job Losses", which sets out the way TECs, the employment service and other local organisations can help individuals and communities affected by job losses.

Training

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places on employment training and youth training schemes have been available in Walthamstow for each of the years 1990 and 1991; and how many are estimated as likely to be available in 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information regarding the number of training places available in Walthamstow is not collected.

Since 1 April 1991, training in Walthamstow has been the responsibility of London East training and enterprise council (LETEC). At 29 March 1992, there were an estimated 4,800 people in training on YT and an estimated 3,600 people in training on ET in the LETEC area.

EC Presidency

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what her Department's priorities are for the United Kingdom presidency of the Community.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The overall theme for the United Kingdom's presidency in employment and social affairs will be "A Community at Work".

The Department's key priorities for the presidency are as follows:

- to focus greater attention on tackling unemployment and creating lasting jobs in the Community;
- to promote even-handed and effective implementation and enforcement of existing EC legislation;
- to continue to remove barriers to the mobility of labour;
- to support the European year of health and safety by taking forward proposals promoting high standards of health and safety at work;
- to manage efficiently the business of the Social Affairs Council.

Training Places, Carlisle

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training places have been available in Carlisle in the years (a) 1988-89, (b) 1989-90, (c) 1990-91 and (d) 1991-92, respectively.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information regarding the number of training places available in Carlisle is not collected.

Since 30 April 1990, training in Carlisle has been the responsibility of Cumbria training and enterprise council (TEC). At 29 March 1992, there were an estimated 3,600 people in training on youth training and an estimated 1,300 people in training on employment training in the Cumbria TEC area.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons aged 16 and 17 years who are not in employment or education and are not on youth training scheme programmes there are in Carlisle at the present time.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the local careers service which covers the Carlisle area that there are currently 203 young people in the area who are registered with it as not in employment or education who are not in YT.

GCHQ

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent discussions she has had with the International Labour Organisation about the ban on trade union organisations at GCHQ; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This matter has very recently been discussed in the international labour conference (ILO) where we confirmed that the dialogue with the trade unions on the issue remains open. At the same time we continued to make clear the overriding national security interests involved. The ILO took account of this position in reaching its conclusions which will be published shortly.

Annual Performance Agreement

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Employment Service annual performance agreement for 1992-93 will be published.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have today placed copies of the Employment Service annual performance agreement for 1992-93 in the Library.

Equal Opportunities

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will name the members of the small high level working group which will advise her on issues relevant to women's opportunities in the workplace and beyond.

Mr. McLoughlin [pursuant to his reply, 9 June 1992, columns 141-42]: I regret that the list of members of the working group on women's issues given in my reply of 9 June 1992 was incorrect. NORTHERN IRELAND

Crime, Armagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on which dates (a) break-ins, (b) burglaries, (c) broken windows and (d) damage to premises were reported to the RUC during May, in the Scotch street, Thomas street, Market street, English street sector of the city centre of Armagh; for which of these dates the RUC has made arrests or charged persons; and if he will make a statement on policing in the city centre of Armagh.

Mr. Mates: The information available for the area specified is shown in the table:

Incidents reported to the police in May 1992

Date	Number
Attempted break-ins
20 May	1
Total	1
Burglaries
1 May	2
4 May	1
5 May	1
7 May	1
11 May	5
16 May	1
18 May	3
19 May	1
22 May	1
26 May	1
27 May	3
28 May	1
Total	21
Broken/cracked windows
26 May	3
29 May	3
Total	6
Other damage to premises
28 May	2
31 May	1
Total	3

I am informed by the Chief Constable that a number of arrests have been made in connection with acts of criminal damage in the area. One person has been charged with the three offences committed on 29 May and a person has been charged with the two criminal damage offences committed on 28 May. Police inquiries are continuing. Additionally, in an effort to improve the physical security of premises in the area and to resolve the current problems, the RUC is maintaining close liaison with the local community through the chamber of trade, the district council and other groups affected.

Community Affiliation

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list under the residuary method of determining an employee's community affiliation (DE code of practice) (a) those names to be regarded as Protestants, and those to be regarded as Roman Catholic, (b) those sporting and leisure pursuits to be so regarded, (c) those clubs or societies, membership of which would indicate such distinction, (d) those qualifications, examinations and educational clauses which indicate a Protestant or Roman Catholic community affiliation and (e) which occupations would indicate Protestant community affiliation and which would indicate Roman Catholic community affiliation; and if he will publish this list.

Mr. Atkins: It is not possible to compile a list as requested. The residuary method of monitoring allows an employer to consider a range of possible indicators of community affiliation and then to treat the employee, or job applicant, as belonging to the community with which the totality of the information shows he has a connection, or has the stronger connection. This is a matter for the individual judgment of the employer in each particular case.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of whether the breakdown of Protestants and Roman Catholics in each district council area, based on all those aged 15 to 64 years, is an accurate reflection of the economically active work force.

Mr. Atkins: Estimates from aggregated 1990 and 1991 labour force survey (LFS) data indicate that in 17 out of the 26 district councils in Northern Ireland, the religious composition of the economically active population is consistent with the revised 1981 census of population figures for the religious composition of persons aged 15 to 64. In the remaining nine district council areas, the LFS estimates suggest that the Catholic proportion of the economically population is higher than that derived from 1981 census figures based on the population aged 15 to 64.

I understand that the Fair Employment Commission will be publishing, in the near future, LFS estimates on the religious composition of the economically active population in district council areas.

Data on the religious composition of the economically active population in each district council area will be contained in the Northern Ireland census 1991 summary report to be published in the autumn.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what monitoring has been done to examine any imbalance in the determining of community affiliation as a result of the numbers of Roman Catholics attending controlled or integrated schools.

Mr. Atkins: Research has shown that, particularly at primary school level, the number of Roman Catholics attending controlled schools does not have any significant effect on employers' monitoring statistics. Integrated schools are not classified for monitoring purposes.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to introduce a non-fossil fuel obligation for renewable energy following the privatisation of Northern Ireland Electricity; what form it will take; and how large the first renewable energy order will be.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of Economic Development has commissioned a study into the potential for renewable energy in Northern Ireland and a decision when to introduce a non-fossil fuel obligation awaits the conclusion of that study. Before making a renewables order, the Department is obliged to consult Northern Ireland Electricity plc and the Director General of Electricity Supply and it would be inappropriate for me to comment on the likely form or scale of the first order in advance of that consultation taking place.

Strip Searches

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide statistics of the number of women's prisons in Northern Ireland that carry out strip search methods as a form of internal prison security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: There is only one prison in Northern Ireland holding female prisoners—Her Majesty's prison Maghaberry. Full searching takes place routinely on certain occasions when prisoners enter or leave the prison and at any other time it is deemed necessary for security reasons.

Sports Council

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will earmark cash in the Sports Council grant aid to enable the Sports Council to list the current stock of school playing fields land.

Mr. Hanley: Information on school playing fields is currently held by the Department of Education and is available to the Northern Ireland Sports Council.

Hospital Beds

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the hospitals in Northern Ireland which had consultant obstetric or general practitioner maternity beds in 1990-91, and give the number of beds of each type in each hospital.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 15 June 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Everton Football Supporters

16. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make a decision on the case concerning the conviction of the Everton football supporters which had been referred to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I wrote to the hon. Member on 8 June. He will now be aware that we have concluded, after careful consideration, that there are insufficient grounds to justify intervention in the convictions by granting free pardons.

Prisons (Privatisation)

17. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate the benefits which the privatisation initiative will bring to the prison system.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Private sector involvement in the prison service introduces new and different methods of managing modern prisons to high standards of service set by the Government. I am quite sure that the introduction of new private sector management will stimulate improved standards and better value for money.

Crime Prevention

18. Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to introduce the crime prevention measures recommended by the committee chaired by James Morgan.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to implement the recommendations of the Morgan report.

Mr. Jack: The recommendations in the Morgan report ranged wider than had been expected under the working group's terms of reference and have therefore taken longer to consider. The report remains under active consideration within the Department and my right hon. and learned Friend hopes to be able to make an announcement in the near future.

May Inquiry

19. Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the May inquiry.

Mr. Jack: Sir John May's inquiry is continuing in accordance with the terms of reference given to him in October 1989.

Police, London

20. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to discuss sector policing in the capital.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend will be meeting the commissioner on 14 July to discuss the policing of the Notting Hill carnival.

He will also be visiting Metropolitan police service divisions to see sector policing in action.

Crime Statistics

21. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures for the change in levels of crime in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) South Wales and (c) Neath since 1979.

Mr. Jack: Between 1979 and 1991 recorded crime increased by 126 per cent. in south Wales and 108 per cent. in England and Wales as a whole. Statistics for Neath are not collected centrally. Statistics for other parts of the United Kingdom are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Crime, Northumberland

22. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further discussions he intends to have with the Northumbria police authority about crime in Northumberland.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans so for further discussions at the moment.

Prisoners (Home Visits)

23. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on releasing prisoners temporarily for home visits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison rules provide that sentenced prisoners may be temporarily released from prison, subject to conditions, for any special purpose or to enable them to engage in employment, to receive instruction or training or to assist them in the transition from prison life to freedom.

A prisoner who has been temporarily released may be recalled to prison at any time whether the conditions of his release have been broken or not.

Remand Prisoners

24. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to deal with remand prisoners in police cells.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison service continues to work to increase the amount of available accommodation in order to reduce the number of prisoners in police cells. In addition to the delivery of a large number of new places under the prison building programme, measures taken so far have included the retention of establishments listed for closure and the conversion of under-occupied young offender accommodation to adult use.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government propose to take to address anomalies in the geographical distribution of remands to prison department custody.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The provision of sufficient places in prison service establishments, which serve the courts by holding inmates remanded in custody or awaiting trial, is a matter which is kept under constant review. Where the current level of provision fails to meet demand or is likely to fail to meet future demand, the prison service seeks to deal with the problem either by changing the role of existing accommodation or through the prison building programme.

Police Numbers

25. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for increasing police numbers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The establishments of individual forces were increased by some 800 posts with effect from 1 April 1992. A further 78 police posts have so far been allocated, in respect of policing at ports, airports and the regional crime squads. The vast majority of new posts have been allocated to forces with the greatest relative need for more officers.

Police, West Yorkshire

26. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the chief constable of West Yorkshire to discuss staffing levels.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have no present plans to meet the chief constable of the West Yorkshire police. I look to the force and the police authority to ensure that West Yorkshire has its full complement of officers.

Drug Offences

27. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the total levels of funds sequestrated from convicted drug pushers in the last five years.

Mr. Jack: The latest figures, which are in respect of confiscation orders made between 1987 and 1990, are given in table 7.25 of Criminal Statistics England and Wales 1990, a copy of which is in the Library. These show that over £27 million was ordered to be confiscated in those years. The current estimate by the national criminal intelligence service of the cumulative total of confiscation orders made since the Drug Trafficking Offences Act came into force in January 1987, up to the end of 1991, is around £35 million.

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have taken place in 1991 in connection with (a) unlawful possession, (b) possession with intent to supply unlawfully, (c) unlawful supply and (d) unlawful import of the drug Ecstasy (MDMA).

Mr. Jack: Figures for 1991 are not yet available. The figures for 1990 were as follows:

Ecstasy (MDMA)

United Kingdom 1990	Number of prosecutions
Unlawful possession	269
Possession with intent to supply unlawfully	87
Unlawful supply	40
Unlawful import	14

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will increase the penalties for the selling of the drug Ecstasy (MDMA).

Mr. Jack: MDMA is categorised as a class A drug under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 and the maximum penalty for supplying or offering to supply is life imprisonment. Consequently, I have no plans to change this penalty.

Citizenship

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a decision is to be taken on the request made by the hon. Member for Bradford, West on 28 April for an application by Mrs. Y. Afzal of Bradford for British citizenship, reference 420258, to be expedited on compassionate grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As I have explained in my reply to the hon. Member's letter, we have agreed to give Mrs. Afzal's application priority consideration. Our inquiries are underway and a decision should be possible within the next few weeks.

Criminal Injuries (Compensation)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases are currently under consideration by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, broken down by the year of application.

Mr. Jack: The number of applications under consideration at the end of May 1992 was 57,800. A further 11,000 were awaiting the applicant's response to an award offer, and 11,800 were awaiting decision on appeal.

The board does not record the age of applications in the form requested. However, the percentage of cases resolved within certain periods of time is shown in the board's annual reports, copies of which are held in the Library.

Fox Hunting

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy on fox hunting.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government believe that participation in field sports, including fox hunting, is a matter for the conscience and decision of the individual.

Prisoners (Medical Treatment)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison inmates have been treated in national health service hospitals in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows the number of referrals to national health service hospitals for out-patient treatment and for in-patient observation or treatment in each of the three financial years up to 1990-91. Corresponding information for 1991-92 is not yet available. Information about the number of prisoners treated is not held centrally.

Referrals	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
Out-patient	18,494	18,740	18,402
In-patient	1,964	1,988	1,887

Age of Consent

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to introduce an equal age of consent in the United Kingdom, regardless of sexual orientation.

Mr. Jack: We have no such proposals at present.

Police Shootings

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of civilians shot dead by police marksmen in each police authority in England and Wales since 1982, indicating whether the deceased were in possession of firearms, replica firearms or were unarmed, and give the verdicts recorded by coroners' inquests in such deaths.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is set out in the table.

[1] An officer of the West Midlands police was acquitted of the manslaughter of the deceased. The coroner subsequently decided to exercise his discretion under section 20 of the Coroners Amendment Act 1926 not to proceed with an inquest.
[2] The deceased was in possession of an air pistol which was incapable of being discharged.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the Fire Service college as an agency; and whether the cost was borne by the parent department or the new agency.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The cost of activities to mark the launch of the Fire Services college as the first Next Steps agency to achieve trading fund status at the outset was about £9,000 and was met by the Home Office.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum salary payable, including performance related element, and the length of time of the contract of the chief executive of the Fire Service college.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The final detail of the total remuneration for the chief executive, whose contract runs initially until October 1993, is under negotiation but the maximum is to be set at a figure substantially less than the maximum (£71,800) for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Service.

Personal Records

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions he has reached on the implications of the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Graham Gaskin for people seeking access to personal records for which he has responsibility; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The consultative document issued by the Department of Health in February, in the light of this case, recorded the Government's view that the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights applied only to social services records. Consideration is currently being given to the question of whether it has any implications for personal records for which my Department has responsibility.

Sexual Offences

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men were sent to prison in each of the last five years for convictions of gross indecency involving consenting sex with men aged over 16 years and under 21 years; how many such prosecutions have taken place in each of the last five years; and how many convicted prisoners there are at present.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table gives information on the offences of indecency between males by a man of the age of 21 or over with another male person under the age of 21 —Sexual Offences Act 1956, section 13 as amended by the Sexual Offences Act 1967, section 3(2). These convictions did not necessarily involve fully consensual behaviour.

Information on the numbers currently serving a custodial sentence in a prison service establishment in England and Wales for this offence is not presently available centrally.

Prison Population

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those prisons where the population on 4 June was less than the certified normal accommodation for reasons connected to industrial action or refusal to co-operate by the staff.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On Thursday 4 June there were no prison service establishments in England and Wales where industrial action was causing the population to fall below the certified normal accommodation.

Prison Budgets

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends that prison governors will be allowed to have full, or substantial, control over their budgets.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are currently considering how the present financial delegations to governors might be extended. Our aim is to introduce any changes on or as soon as possible after the prison service becomes an agency in April 1993.

Dartmoor Prison

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the current programme for refurbishment at HM prison Dartmoor is likely to be completed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The building programme now in progress at HM prison Dartmoor (the refurbishment of A, B and D wings, and the construction of a new kitchen, victualling store, administration and visits complex) is scheduled for completion in May 1994.

Work is due to start later this year on an all weather sports pitch and on a programme to install integral sanitation in F and G wings and the hospital. The remaining wings are due to be refurbished in 1994-95.

Juveniles

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15-year-olds were sentenced to detention in a young offenders institution in 1990; and for what offences they were sentenced.

Mr. Jack: Information for 1990 is given in the table:

Bridewell Prison

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the condition and use of holding cells in Bridewell prison, Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In addition to the hon. Member, my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has also received letters from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) the rector of Liverpool and the high sheriff of Merseyside about the conditions in Liverpool Bridewell.

The prison service has received a request from the Merseyside police for the funding of improvements to the holding cells and adjacent areas in Liverpool Bridewell. There are arrangements for the prison service in certain circumstances to meet the cost of essential improvements to accommodation being used by the police to hold prisoners who should be in prison service establishments. The request is being considered and a response will be made as soon as possible.

Police Expenditure

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by how much his Department has increased spending on the police in the last year; and what estimate he has made of the costs incurred directly by the public sector in the provision of policing outside the budgetary responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Home Office expenditure on the police increased from £2,435 million in 1990-91 to £2,830 million in 1991-92. Information on the costs of police forces outside Home Office jurisdiction is not held centrally.

Police Radio Transmissions

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to overcome the interception of police radio transmissions by unauthorised persons.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My Department, working closely with the Association of Chief Police Officers, is establishing standing arrangements for the supply of speech privacy devices which will render police radio transmissions unintelligible to the unauthorised listener. It is for individual chief constables to implement this solution.

Murder Sentences

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the length of sentences currently being served by women convicted of murdering their husbands.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From time to time I receive representations about individual cases and about the mandatory life sentence for murder.

Belmarsh Prison

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the board of visitors at Belmarsh prison, or from others, concerning the catering arrangements and the quality of food at Belmarsh; and what assessment he has made of the performance of the private caterers at Belmarsh.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have received no representations about the catering arrangements and the quality of food at Belmarsh prison from the board of visitors. Complaints from prisoners about the food are common to all prisons, Belmarsh included. Action is always taken locally to investigate them and resolve any problems which are discovered.

The food on offer in Belmarsh is sampled twice daily by the governor. Catering services supplied by contract in Belmarsh are under constant scrutiny. If they are considered by the governor or by the prison service catering specialists not to be complying with their contract, action will be taken.

Political Asylum

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Somali applicants for political asylum were granted full refugee status; and how many were granted exceptional leave to remain in (a) 1989, (b) 1990, (c) 1991 and (d) the current year;

(2) how many applications for political asylum were received from Somali nationals in (a) 1989, (b) 1990, (c) 1991 and (d) the current year; and how many remain outstanding from each year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information is given in the table.

Applications[1,2] received for asylum in the United Kingdom by Somali nationals, excluding dependants, and decisions[1,2], 1989-1992

	Applications received	Decisions[3]

[6] Including outstanding applications from earlier years. These figures are maxima which are likely to overstate because of earlier underrecording of decisions.

Crime, West Yorkshire

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the increase in crime in West Yorkshire.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The increase in crime figures for West Yorkshire in the last year was attributable mainly to vehicle related theft and burglaries, often involving juveniles. It is one of the force's benefiting from the urban crime fund and entitled to additional Government funding of up to £3·66 million for 1992-93. This will enable the force to undertake special innovative projects to help tackle its particular problem areas of crime.

Residence Permits

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion, over the last five years, of in-country applications were made within a short period of arrival in the United Kingdom within one week, two weeks and one month.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 16 June 1992]: Comprehensive reliable information is not available. The information available suggests that in 1990 and 1991 around a third of in-country asylum applicants who were admitted to the United Kingdom as visitors or students applied within a month of their arrival.

ENVIRONMENT

Oil Spillages (Thames)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action he proposes to take to reduce the incidence of oil spillages into the Thames;

(2) how many oil spillages into the Thames have occurred in the past year and from what source.

Mr. Maclean: The National Rivers Authority, which we established in 1989, has wide powers to prosecute polluters and to recover its clean up costs, and a vigorous policy of prosecuting those responsible for serious incidents; the courts can and do impose significant fines in respect of major cases, particularly since the Government's increase (to £20,000) in the maximum fine which magistrates can impose. I understand from the National Rivers Authority that in 1991, 23 oil pollution incidents were reported on the tidal Thames, nine of which were classified as major.

Conservation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to develop a United Kingdom conservation database in a form which could be inter-linked with the World Conservation Monitoring Centre.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 12 June the Darwin initiative on the survival of the species. This will draw together and build on United Kingdom strengths in the biodiversity field including the very good work carried out by the World Conservation Monitoring Centre. We are currently considering how this initiative will be developed.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining his Department's policy on the conservation of global commons and the equitable sharing of derived benefits.

Mr. Maclean: Global commons are those areas such as the high seas and the atmosphere over which no one country has national sovereignty. I am not aware of any benefits derived from these areas which would need to be subject to equitable sharing.

Biological Diversity

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage the completion, adoption and implementation of a convention on the conservation of biological diversity.

Mr. Maclean: The negotiations on the convention of biological diversity were completed and adopted on 22 May in Nairobi. On 12 June my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister signed the convention on behalf of the United Kingdom. The convention will come into force only after 30 countries have ratified it. We hope that that will be soon.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to undertake research on the effects of habitat fragmentation on biological diversity.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is currently funding two projects relevant to our understanding of the effects of habitat fragmentation on biological diversity.

Countryside Survey 1990 is a detailed survey of Great Britain, jointly funded by NERC—the National Environment Research Council. A more detailed assessment of key habitats has also been commissioned with the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology. In addition, the joint nature conservation committee will shortly put out to tender a project on the effect of habitat fragmentation on vertebrate populations.

London Docklands

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total spending that the London Docklands development corporation is committing to social projects in 1992-93; and if he will break this figure down into amounts to be spent on (a) training, (b) social housing, (c) Tower Hamlets accord, (d) Newham memorandum of agreement, (e) community grants and (f) health projects; and if he will make a statement on the future of the social programme and the future of the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Redwood: The London Docklands Development Corporation has allocated £12·4 million for social schemes to be undertaken in 1992-93, broken down as follows:

	£ million
(i) Training and education	6·0
(ii) Social housing	4·1
(iii) Community grants	1·7
(iv) Health projects	0·6

The corporation has earmarked £8·5 million for the Tower Hamlets accord and £3·7 million for the Newham memorandum in this financial year. Some social schemes listed in (i)-(iv), for example in Southwark or benefiting Docklands as a whole, fall outside the scope of either agreement.

The corporation will continue to provide funding for projects which improve the social infrastructure of Docklands.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the total area of land in the London Docklands urban development area covered by planning consents or permission for enterprise zone development that have been granted to the developers Olympia and York.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 12 June 1992]: The London Docklands development corporation has granted enterprise zone consent or planning permission to Olympia and York for the development of 34·6 hectares in the urban development area.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking following the recommendations on aircraft noise prepared by the noise review working party 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's response to the eight recommendations on aircraft noise in the noise review working party's report 1990 were published as part of the Department of Transport's Consultation Paper, "Control of Aircraft Noise", published in August 1991. That paper accepted some of the recommendations outright, rejected two, and invited comments on others. Publication of the consultation paper also fulfilled an undertaking given in the Government's White Paper "Our Common Inheritance".

In response to one of the recommendations (No. 31) my Department issued for consultation last December a draft planning policy guidance note "Planning and Noise" which incorporates the concept of different levels of noise exposure and relates this to noise sensitive development near airfields.

The Government are carefully considering the responses to the "Control of Aircraft Noise" consultation paper and a Government response will be announced in due course.

Air Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by his Department in fulfilling the targets for emission levels set by the United Nations Commission for Europe convention on long-range transboundary air pollution.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom is committed to two targets under protocols to the convention; to return our annual emissions of nitrogen oxides to 1987 levels by 1994, and to reduce our annual emissions of volatile organic compounds by 30 per cent. from 1988 levels by 1999. We remain on course to meet both obligations.

Environmental Information

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to the European Environment Council to bring forward the required reporting dates for environmental information provided for under article 7 of Council directive 91/692/EEC, as published in the Official Journal, No. L 377, pages 48-55, 31 December 1991, following decisions taken on the reporting of environmental information at the United Nations conference on environment and development.

Mr. Maclean: The reporting dates specified in article 7 of the directive were agreed as recently as December 1991 following thorough consultation and represent the shortest practicable timetable for implementation. We do not therefore intend to propose that they should be brought forward.

We fully support the conclusions of UNCED on regular reporting of progress towards sustainable development but this has no direct bearing on the timetable for implementation of the EC directive. The United Kingdom is well placed to follow up UNCED through its established system of annual white paper reports.

Credit Approvals

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have received supplementary credit approvals for the present financial year; and if he will give details.

Mr. Redwood: No central record of credit approvals issued by Government Departments is maintained. To compile a list of supplementary credit approvals issued for the present financial year would involve disproportionate cost.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

Mr. Redwood: Following the publication of the White Paper "Competing for Quality" a detailed programme of possible opportunities for market testing has been drawn up. A statement will be made shortly by the Office of Public Service and Science.

Opencast Mining

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those mineral authorities which, in the last five years, have requested the withdrawal of permitted development rights vested in British Coal in respect of opencast prospecting; if he will, in each case, give the name of the site involved, within the terms of article 5 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988; what was his decision in respect of each of those sites; and if he will give details of the cost of compensation to British Coal and other interested persons.

Mr. Baldry: In the last five years no mineral authorities have requested the withdrawal of permitted development rights vested in British Coal in respect of opencast prospecting.

Commissioner for Local Administration

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had regarding the remit of the Commissioner for Local Administration in England; and whether he has any proposals to change that remit.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations on this subject, including representations from the commission itself, and he is considering whether it would be appropriate to make a change in the scope of the remit.

Acid Deposition

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made by his Department in funding research work to define the tolerance of ecosystems to acid deposition and the development of new standards and controls to ensure that those thresholds are not exceeded.

Mr. Maclean: The tolerances of ecosystems in soils and freshwaters to acid deposition, or their critical loads, have been quantified and mapped for Scotland, Wales and much of England. Maps have also been prepared comparing present and predicted deposition loads with the critical loads. These show that substantial progress will have been made by 2005 in reducing areas subject to damage. Copies of all these maps are in the Library of the House.

All this work has been funded through the Department's air quality research programme, which has also supported projects on abatement strategies and techniques.

Green Consumer Label

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by his Department towards developing a green consumer label for products.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom has strongly supported the establishment of a European eco-labelling scheme. Now that the European Community regulation setting up the scheme has been adopted we are taking a leading role in progressing arrangements for a launch later this year.

Power Companies (Appeals)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he expects to determine the appeals by National Power and PowerGen under section 22(5) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990; if he will undertake to publicise the result of the appeal; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to reject National Power and PowerGen's appeals to exclude information from the public registers on the grounds of commercial confidentiality under section 22(5) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Decisions on these appeals will be made as soon as possible, and announced publicly. The Secretary of State does not comment on appeals awaiting determination.

Local Government Finance

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the metropolitan and London borough councils which have obtained a higher standard spending assessment settlement per person in the current year than St. Helens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows those London borough and metropolitan district councils which have a higher 1992-93 standard spending assessment per adult than St. Helens.

Standard spending assessments are calculated using the same principles applied to all authorities. They take account of each authority's own demographic, geographic and social characteristics.

Packaging

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to encourage manufacturers to desist from wasting resources by over-packaging.

Mr. Maclean: My colleagues at the Department have met representatives of the packaging industry three times this year to discuss ways in which they can eliminate unnecessary packaging and reduce the amount of packaging which is thrown away. We have indicated that, if the industry does not produce substantive proposals, we are prepared to take action.

As an initial response to the need to minimise packaging waste, the British Retail Consortium recently issued guidance to its members and their suppliers on retail packaging. Following discussions with the Government, I understand that the packaging industry will be announcing an initiative to deal with complaints about over-packaging next week. I will write to the hon. Member when full details are available.

Environmental Impact Assessments

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of his formal response to the letter from Mr. Carlo Ripa di Meana in respect of the implementation of the EC directive on environmental impact assessments.

Mr. Maclean: The details of article 169 correspondence are, by convention, treated in confidence between the Commission and member states.

Council Tax

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the position of beach chalets and static caravans under the council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under the council tax, the treatment of this property will be broadly the same as it is under the community charge.

A beach chalet or hut which is living accommodation will be banded for council tax on the same basis as other domestic property unless it is available for letting as holiday accommodation for more than 140 days a year, when it will be subject to non-domestic rates. If a chalet is not living accommodation, it will be liable for non-domestic rates.

A caravan or mobile home which is used as a residence will be banded for council tax in the same way as other residences. The pitch for any other caravan will be liable for non-domestic rates, usually paid by the site operator.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average length of time for appeals to be heard against uniform business rates in Carlisle.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information is not available centrally on the time taken to deal with non-domestic rating appeals.

Appeals in Carlisle are dealt with by the Cumbria valuation tribunal. Following revaluation on 1 April 1990, the tribunal initially received about 7,800 appeals (including transitional cases) in respect of the whole of Cumbria. Most of these were received towards the end of that financial year and by the end of March 1992 some 4,200 had been received.

Caravans

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the new building regulations and SI 2768 apply to caravans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: No. The requirements of the Building Regulations (SI 1991 No. 2768) 1991 apply only to building work, and caravans do not fall within the definition of building contained within these regulations.

Housing Expenditure, Ryedale

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the sum of money paid to the Ryedale district council when its stock of council houses was transferred to the housing association concerned, the consequent reduction in debt and the amount which was available for capital projects.

Mr. Baldry: Ryedale district council transferred its housing stock to Ryedale Housing Association in February 1991 for the sume of £28·3 million. Following transfer, the council was able to repay all its external loan debt of £18 million, leaving some £10 million available for capital projects.

Merseyside Task Force

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the new director of Merseyside task force will be appointed and take up his duties.

Mr. Howard: As soon as possible.

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves) of 15 May, Official Report, column 237, what consultation he has had with the Commissioner for the Environment of the European Commission concerning the United Kingdom contribution to international efforts to reduce all greenhouse gases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The limitation of greenhouse gas emissions is discussed regularly at meetings involving European Community member states and the Commission, most recently at the Environmental Council of 26 May. At that meeting, the Council expressed its support for the United Nations framework convention on climate change, which will commit developed country parties to adopt policies and measures aimed at returning emissions of greenhouse gases not controlled by the Montreal protocol to their 1990 levels by 2000.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves) of 15 May, Official Report, column 237, what progress he has to report on a United Kingdom strategy to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases other than carbon dioxide.

Mr. Maclean: The 1990 White Paper on the Environment, "This Common Inheritance", and the first year report on the White Paper give details of measures already being taken to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases other than carbon dioxide. The United Nations framework convention on climate change will commit developed country parties to submit detailed information on their policies and measures to limit emissions of all greenhouse gases not controlled by the Montreal protocol.

Energy Savings Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves) of 15 May, Official Report, column 237, what progress he has made on the establishment of an energy savings trust; if he will specify what its (a) departmental, (b) regulatory agency and (c) regulated public utility funding is; what its estimated start of operations date is; and what its objectives and purposes are.

Mr. Maclean: The Energy Saving Trust is being established to develop and propose programmes designed to promote the efficient use of energy and so protect the environment. My officials in the Energy Efficiency Office are working with British Gas and the regional electricity companies (RECS) to establish the Energy Saving Trust as soon as is practicable. It is hoped that the first pilot scheme to be funded by British Gas will begin within the next few months.

Green Issues

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who are the Ministers responsible for green issues in each Government department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The environment is not just the concern of one Government Department, and the nomination of Green Ministers in each Department is an important part of our strategy to ensure that environmental considerations are taken into account in all policy areas. Green Ministers follow up the commitments relevant to their Departments in the Government's 1990 White Paper on the Environment. They ensure the integration of environmental concerns with the policy and work of their own Departments. And they broadcast the environmental message in their own field.

The "Green" Ministers are:

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will identify the number of civil servants by grade who will be moving from Marsham street to docklands.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 17 June 1992]: No decisions have yet been taken about the number of civil servants by grade which will be moved to Docklands. All London posts in my Department are currently being reviewed to assess their suitability for relocation.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the 2,000 civil servants due to move from Marsham street to Docklands have personal contact with Ministers on average once a month or more.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 17 June 1992]: Detailed records of contact are not kept. A review of suitability of posts for relocation to Docklands will take into account the need for personal contact with Ministers.

Biodiversity

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the steps being taken to follow up the decisions taken at Rio de Janeiro on biodiversity.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 17 June 1992]: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister informed the House on 15 June that he had announced at Rio a Darwin initiative for the survival of species. This will draw on the great strengths which we have in our many centres of excellence in biodiversity to provide practical help to enable countries to meet their commitments under the biodiversity convention.

My right hon. Friend has also written to EC and G7 colleagues proposing an eight point plan for follow up including the drawing up of plans for action on global diversity.

World Environment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance was provided by Her Majesty's Government to the United Nations Environment Programme for the UNEP report on the state of the world environment, published on 7 May; and what evaluation he has made of the report.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 16 June 1992]: The United Kingdom contribution to UNEP for financial year 1992-93 is £4·5 million. This helps to fund all UNEP activities including the production of reports. The report on the state of the world environment is a sound and useful document.

Water Disconnections

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to discuss with the chairman of the North West Water Authority the rise in disconnections of water services between 1990-91 and 1991-92 with a view to providing emergency services to these households;

(2) when he intends to make a statement on his plans to discuss with the chairman of the North West Water authority the rise in disconnections of water services between 1990-1991 and 1991-1992, with a view to providing emergency services to those households.

Mr. Maclean: The Director General of Water Services has the specific function of protecting the interests of customers, including those who are having difficulty in meeting their bills, and is concerned at the sharp increase in disconnections nationally. I welcome the action he has taken in issuing revised guidelines to companies and his proposals for further research into the characteristics of those who have been disconnected. It is right that bills should be paid, but also that companies should provide every assistance to customers who are having difficulty in meeting their bills. The legislation now provides that, in virtually all instances, customers will not be disconnected unless they have failed to comply with the terms of a court order for repayment of outstanding arrears. Where a supply of water to a house is disconnected, and is not re-connected within 24 hours, the company must notify the local authority in whose area the house is situated. The terms of an appointee's licence provide that no customer should be disconnected if he or she is seeking assistance from DSS and has notified the company to that effect.

DEFENCE

Detention Sentences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) men and (b) women are serving a detention sentence in military establishments in England and Wales as of 8 June.

Mr. Aitken: As at 8 June there were 232 males and seven females serving sentences at military detention centres in England. There are no detention centres in Wales. In the Army and RAF sentences of less than 28 days are served at local establishments. The numbers detained at local establishments are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Military Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Aitken: The Armed Forces no longer have any military prisons. The last one, Shepton Mallet, closed in 1968. All service personnel sentenced to imprisonment by courts martial serve their sentence in civil prisons.

Markle and Forss Stations

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has reached a decision on the future use of land at the Markle and Forss communications stations, Caithness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No final decisions have yet been taken.

Civilian Establishment, Catterick

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current civilian establishment at Catterick garrison and RAF Catterick; and what is the projected establishment for each successive year for which figures are available.

Mr. Aitken: The current civilian establishments at Catterick garrison and RAF Catterick are 1,221 and 85 respectively. In common with many other Defence establishments in the United Kingdom, those at Catterick are currently under review. Until this review is completed, it is not possible to give forecasts of likely future civilians numbers.

Cambodia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 291, what means of self-protection will be available to Royal Navy and Royal Marine personnel operating on Cambodian vessels as part of the naval group within the UN transitional authority in Cambodia.

Mr. Aitken: The Royal Naval and Royal Marine personnel operating on Cambodian vessels as part of the United Kingdom's contribution to UNTAC are acting as United Nations military observers and, in accordance with the usual practice, will not be armed. The security of all United Kingdom participants in UNTAC is the responsibility of the United Nations and the Cambodian factions. We do however, keep the security position in Cambodia and the possible threat to the safety of United Kingdom personnel under continuous review.

Plymouth Urban Development Corporation

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much development land at Plymouth his Department has handed over to the proposed urban development corporation; what funds he has made available from the defence budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: None. The amount of surplus MOD land in Plymouth to be handed over to the proposed urban development corporation and the mechanics of transfer of land and funds remain to be worked out in detail.

Maersk Ascension

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George) of 20 May, Official Report, column 185, if he will set out the total amount paid to date for charter of Maersk Ascension since inception of the charter arrangements; what arrangements existed for bulk fuel storage prior to the charter for Maersk Ascension; what assessment his Department has made of the costs of construction of appropriate onshore facilities and of subsequent running costs; and for what purposes bulk fuel storage at Ascension island is required.

Mr. Aitken: Since inception of the charter arrangements for the Maersk Ascension in July 1983, the Department has paid just over £23·5 million in charter costs to date. Before the Falklands campaign there was no requirement for bulk fuel storage for the RAF at Ascension island. During and after the conflict temporary storage arrangements were made involving the use of pillow tanks. In 1988 a limited study showed the costs of construction of an appropriate on-shore facility to be around £11 million. No estimate for running costs was made. A detailed investment appraisal is currently being undertaken. The requirement for bulk fuel storage at Ascension island is to support routine flying activities and for refuelling of aircraft flying to the Falkland islands.

Royal Navy Helicopter Team

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why he proposes to disband the Royal Navy helicopter display team.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long notices informing the public of their right to inspect plans of a proposed planning application for the extension of the sewage works at Menwith Hill station were displayed; what was the period of display specified by the defence land agent; and what complaints he has received about the period the notices were displayed.

Mr. Aitken: The notices concerning the proposed development of sewage works at Menwith Hill station were displayed on two separate occasions for a total of 14 days. The original period specified by the Defence land agent was seven days in accordance with the Town and Country Planning Act Section 65(3). One complaint has been received regarding the period the notice was displayed.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will withdraw a planning application for the extension of the sewage works at Menwith Hill station.

Mr. Aitken: No.

W. S. Atkins Ltd.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the nature and total value of contracts awarded to W. S. Atkins Ltd. and associated companies by (a) his Department and (b) or International Military Services Ltd. or its subsidiaries, for each year since 1980.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has placed contracts with W. S. Atkins Ltd. and associated companies as follows:

Financial year	Value of contracts £
1982-83	80,730
1983-84	48,050
1984-85	45,950
1985-86	152,307
1986-87	155,265
1987-88	1,106,893
1988-89	850,961
1989-90	887,640
1990-91	422,233
1991-92	1,690,388

The nature of work includes research, development, design, feasibility and project studies, new building, utilities agreements and production. Records for earlier years are not available.

With regard to contracts placed by International Military Services Ltd., IMS ceased trading on 31 July 1991. Details of individual contracts concluded prior to this date are commercial in confidence.

Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each type of operational aircraft currently in service and the numbers of each.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 13 May, Official Report, column 152.

Iraq

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 5 June, to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), Official Report, column 672, if he will provide details of the type and nature of the evidence that Iraq had developed a crude nuclear warhead design; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Iraqi documentation seized by the International Atomic Energy Authority's sixth nuclear inspection team provided the incontrovertible evidence of Iraq's development of a crude nuclear device. A report on that inspection is available in the Library.

Brigadier Anthony Cowgill

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance has been provided by his Department to Brigadier Anthony Cowgill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Brigadier Cowgill saw a number of open files from the Public Record Office in the Ministry of Defence. He also saw in the Ministry of Defence several open microfilms of allied documents from the national archives in Washington which that archive had sent to the Ministry of Defence for its permission for their release, as is the normal practice.

Public Records

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance in searching public records has been provided by his Department to researchers and authors in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Whilst resources preclude us from undertaking detailed research for members of the public, we endeavour to be as helpful as possible with the many inquiries received in writing or orally, by directing enquirers to relevant material in the Public Record Office or elsewhere.

DEFENCE

Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the discussions that his Department has had with the Greenwich health authority and the South East Thames regional health authority about the future of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital; and if he will place copies of any relevant correspondence and other documentation in the Library.

Mr. Aitken: Officials of my Department have had exploratory talks with members of the Greenwich health authority and, more recently, with members of the South East Thames regional health authority about a number of proposals concerning the future of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital. These talks have been conducted in confidence.

El Alamein

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations he has received from British veterans of El Alamein about a memorial service to mark the 50th anniversary of the victory; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy that the allied victory at El Alamein in 1942 should be commemorated by a memorial service in London to mark the 50th Anniversary in October.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence has received a small number of representations from veterans of the battle and a number of questions have been asked in the House of Lords.

The 50th anniversary of the battle will be commemorated in Egypt at a Commonwealth ceremony and at an international ceremony held jointly with Germany and Italy. I understand that 400 to 500 veterans will be present, in parties arranged by the Royal British Legion and the Eighth Army Association.

The Government do not arrange memorial services in London to commemorate particular battles of this kind. However, the Royal British Legion's annual festival at the Royal Albert hall will this year mark the 50th anniversary of the battle and I understand the Eighth Army Association is expecting 2,000 of its 3,000 members to be at its annual reunion in Blackpool on 31 October. In addition I understand that the Royal British Legion will invite the Eighth Army Association to lead the Remembrance Day parade.

Director of Public Prosecutions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on how many occasions his Department has written to the Director of Public Prosecutions drawing the attention of the Director of Public Prosecutions to the value of work done for his Department by individuals against whom the Director of Public Prosecutions is evaluating evidence with the intention of deciding to prosecute;

(2) whether he will publish the letter sent by his Department to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland before the final decision to prosecute Mr. Nelson outlining Mr. Nelson's services for the security forces in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Rifkind: It is not the practice to disclose the substance of consultations as to the public interest.

Housing Stock

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dwellings owned by his Department remained vacant on 31 March this year, and on the same date in each of the previous two years, in each of the six district council areas in Cornwall; what arrangements have been agreed to make them available on a fixed-term basis for renting by the local authorities or housing associations; and if he will make a statement on his policy to enable the best possible use of housing stock in rural areas with major homelessness problems.

Mr. Aitken: The number of vacant dwellings owned by my Department in Cornwall over the last three years as at 31 March was as follows:

	Number
1990	118
1991	80
1992	98

Figures for individual district council areas are not available. The figure for 31 March 1992 represents just over 9 per cent. of our total stock and is in line with advice from outside consultants on the appropriate management margin needed to meet Defence requirements. Many of the vacant properties were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation, while others were already allotted to service families who were due to move in shortly. Wherever possible we do arrange leases of temporarily surplus houses to local authorities and housing associations. We currently have some 950 properties on lease throughout the United Kingdom, including 17 on lease in Cornwall to Kerrier district council.

The Department's policy is to dispose of all property which is surplus to its long term requirements. Of the 2 MOD dwellings currently being sold in Cornwall, 19 at Padstow were offered to the Council and to a local housing association but the offer was declined. They are now to be sold on the open market.

Supply Management Unit

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will transfer back to RAF Carlisle the deputy director of supply management 15 unit which is at present situated at RAF Harrogate.

Mr. Aitken: No. As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces announced to the House on 4 June, it is proposed that the RAF's support management organisation at Harrogate will relocate to Wyton as part of the RAF's new Logistics Command.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of staff of the Defence Export Services Organisation are seconded from industry; and what functions they perform.

Mr. Aitken: The Head of the Defence Export Services Organisation (HDES) and the international finance adviser (IFA) are both seconded from industry. The IFA advises HDES and United Kingdom companies on the financing and credit insurance facilities available to support overseas defence sales.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are employed in each of the overseas offices of the Defence Export Services Organisation and, in each case, what is the estimated annual cost of the office; and how many are employed in the London office.

Mr. Aitken: The following is a breakdown of the Defence Export Services Organisation overseas offices, the numbers of staff employed in each office and the estimated annual cost of each office:

1992-93

Office	Staff numbers	Estimated costs £
New Delhi	3	91,200
Riyadh	2	86,900
Kuala Lumpur	7	128,500
Seoul	3	109,600
Ankara	1	47,100
Kuwait	1	65,400
Canberra	2	70,700
Jakarta	3	75,800
Bangkok	2	68,800

The Defence staff in Washington (1992-93 cost estimate £600,000) are no longer included in the Defence Export Services Organisation budget.

There are 246 staff employed in the London office.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Public Petitions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to respond to the fourth report from the Select Committee on Procedure of Session 1991-92, on public petitions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The report was published on 21 May and I am still considering it.

HEALTH

Nurses

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to decrease the work load of national health service nurses.

Mr. Sackville: It is for NHS employers to ensure that units are adequately staffed to meet the workload requirements and agreed standards and to ensure that there is no excessive work burden on individual nurses.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to increase the training and support for community nurses when the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 comes into effect.

Mr. Sackville: It is for regional health authorities to calculate the overall demand for training non-medical staff, including community nurses and to top-slice sufficient funds for appropriate training places. The Department will be monitoring the way in which regions discharge this responsibility. We shall expect regions to co-ordinate their training plans with requirements identified in locally agreed community care plans.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider establishing confidential counselling for nurses at the unit level at all national health service hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: The provision of counselling services for NHS staff is a matter for local management. Where appropriate, they may form part of the local occupational health service.

Census Information

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when small area statistics of the 1991 census will be available to the public; when they were originally intended for publication; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In my reply to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 2 June, Official Report, column 454, I stated that every effort will be made to publish 1991 census county monitors by the end of September 1992. Eight were published by 16 June. These monitors contain summary statistics for all local authority districts on all the census topics for which answers were fully processed. The corresponding small area statistics for enumeration districts and wards in England and Wales and for output areas and postcode sectors in Scotland follow the publication of the monitors, and will be released county by county between June and October 1992. The original timetable for the release of these statistics was October 1991 to August 1992. For the reason for the processing problem which caused the delay I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the then Under-Secretary of State gave the then Member for Nottingham, South, Mr. Brandon-Bravo, on 5 March at columns 272-73.

Further details of the census output timetable will be published in "Census Newsletters", copies of which are placed in the Library. The next issue, No. 22, will contain a revised timetable for the publication of individual county monitors.

Residential Care

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she plans to encourage dual registration of nursing and residential homes.

Mr. Yeo: It is for homes to decide what type of care they wish to offer. We have provided for dual registration so that a single home can provide both residential and nursing care.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that clients of nursing and residential homes are fully informed of the service available in their community when the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 comes into effect.

Mr. Yeo: The National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 requires local authorities to prepare community care plans in consultation with local health authorities, housing authorities, voluntary organisations and representatives of service users and their carers. These plans should be published and made widely available to the public.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she plans to monitor the placement of patients in residential and nursing homes when the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 comes into effect.

Mr. Yeo: We shall be monitoring the implementation of all the major provisions of the community care reforms.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the numbers of elderly people in Crewe and Nantwich living in (a) local authority nursing homes, (b) local authority residential homes and (c) private nursing homes for the years (i) 1985-86, (ii) 1990-91 and (iii) 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: Nursing homes are not provided by local authorities.

At 31 March 1991 there were 1,747 people in local authority homes for elderly people in Cheshire including 240 in the Crewe and Nantwich area. This compared with 1,799 at 31 March 1986. The March 1986 comparative figure for the Crewe and Nantwich area is not known. The number includes some younger physically handicapped people, who are not separately identified.

Information is not collected centrally on the numbers of residents in private nursing homes. The number of beds designated for elderly people in private nursing homes in the Crewe health authority area at 31 March 1991 was 276 compared with 136 at 31 December 1986.

Information for 1991-92 is not yet available.

Hospital Managers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish a code of conduct for managers in national health service hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans to establish a general code of conduct for NHS hospital managers. Guidance will continue to be issued on specific management matters as the need arises.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will create a training programme for managers of national health service hospitals in staff and personnel relations.

Dr. Mawhinney: The importance of good staff and personnel relations is being increasingly recognised by those involved in training managers of national health service hospitals. The general but strong view in the Department and NHS is that staff and personnel relations training should continue to be integrated into general management training rather than be compartmentalised, thus creating the danger of it being seen as an "optional extra".

NHS Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to preclude clauses in national health service contracts of employment which restrict freedom of speech, other than in respect of medical confidence.

Dr. Mawhinney: We shall shortly be consulting with professional interests, managers, and those representing patients, on proposed new guidance to clarify the basis on which NHS staff may express views about the provision of services. A balance must be struck between the duty of staff to raise matters of professional concern and the need to safeguard confidentiality.

Dentists

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average income of an NHS dentist, net of expenses, in the Kensington and Chelsea and Westminster family health services authority area.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information about dentists' net remuneration for particular family health services authority areas is not available centrally.

Eye Tests

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many eye tests were carried out in the London borough of Waltham Forest in each year since 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: Figures are not available in respect of London boroughs. The numbers of NHS sight tests paid for in each financial year by the Redbridge and Waltham Forest family health services authority are shown in the table. The Department does not collect information on the volume of private sight tests carried out.

Year	Number of sight tests
1987-88	111,070
1988-89	118,100
1989-90	[1]54,960
1990-91	43,070

[1] It is estimated that there were 23,530 tests carried out before 1 April 1989—when NHS sight tests were restricted to certain groups in the population—for which payment was not made until the 1989-90 financial year. The remaining 31,430 paid for in 1989-90 do not represent a full year under the new system, because of the delay in payments.

Nicotine Patches

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will authorise the supply of nicotine patches for the treatment of smoking under the national health service.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she has any plans to make nicotine plaster patches available by prescription under the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: The supply of nicotine patches on prescription is currently being considered by the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances.

Abortion

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will make it her policy to ensure that women considering abortions have the option of access to ultrasound scanning facilities to enable them more fully to understand the nature of the operation about which they are being counselled; and to ensure that the existence of such an option is explained to them.

Mr. Sackville: The decision as to whether an ultrasound scan should be used in any particular case is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned. Counselling should include the provision of any information the woman may wish to have about her condition or the operation being contemplated.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women normally resident overseas visited the United Kingdom for abortions in the latest year for which figures are available; and what information she has on the total level of fees which was thus generated.

Mr. Sackville: In the period 1 October 1990 to 30 September 1991, 11,552 non-residents had abortions in England, Wales and Scotland. Fees paid will vary according to gestation, any complications and length of stay. The total is not known centrally.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names and addresses of all those private clinics which are licensed by her Department for the performing of abortions, indicating where appropriate those which have special arrangements for late abortions, and giving the most recent two dates upon which an unannounced visit was made by officials representing her Department to each of those clinics to inspect their facilities and the service which they provided.

Mr. Sackville: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Health gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) on 3 February at columns 86-89. Those private sector places approved to perform abortions over 20 and up to 24 weeks with dates of the last two visits by Department of Health officials are:

Approved place	Date of last two visits
Robert clinic, Birmingham	July 1991 and January 1992
Leigham clinic, London	October 1991 and March 1992
Rosslyn nursing home, East Twickenham, Middlesex	October 1991 and February 1992
Wistons nursing home, Brighton	September 1991 and November 1991
Raleigh nursing home, London	March 1992 and May 1992
Parkview clinic, London	December 1991 and May 1992

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of abortions performed under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967, in NHS facilities or in private clinics but at a cost to the NHS, in the latest year for which figures are available; what was the average cost of each of those abortions to the national health service; what is the resultant total cost of abortions to the NHS in that year; and whether these estimates include the cost of treating those patients who suffer adverse physical or mental reactions as a result of the abortion.

Mr. Sackville: The total number of abortions in England, Wales and Scotland performed under the National Health Service in 1990, either in NHS hospitals or through arrangements between NHS authorities and the private sector, was 93,212. The cost of an abortion varies according to gestation, any complications and length of stay. The average cost of a straightforward in-patient abortion in an NHS hospital is £270 at 1990-91 prices. This figure does not include the cost of any subsequent patient care.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total number of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 since its implementation; and how many and what percentage of these abortions were performed (a) in respect of babies conceived as the result of rape and (b) under the social clause, ground II.

Mr. Sackville: A total of 3,688,096 abortions have been performed in Great Britain under the Abortion Act 1967 since its implementation. (This covers the period from the time when the Act came into force on 27 April 1968 until 30 September 1991, the latest date for which figures are available). Of these, 3,154,637 (85·5 per cent.) were performed on the ground that "the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated."

The remaining information requested is not available in the precise form specified. As rape is not in itself a statutory ground for performing an abortion under the 1967 Act, and is not required to be specified on the notification form by the certifying doctor, the exact number of notifications of abortions associated with rape is not known. However, in some cases the information is volunteered, and arrangements have been made to code separately and analyse all notification forms which mention rape from 1987 in Great Britain. Of the 912,546 notifications received from the period 1987 to 30 September 1991 for abortions performed in Great Britain, 191 (0·02 per cent.) mentioned rape. Earlier, but non-comparable, data relating to abortions performed in England and Wales were collected clerically and published for the years 1968-73, in table 12 of the Registrar General's "Statistical Review, Supplement on Abortion", a copy of which is in the Library. The reliability of these earlier data is uncertain.

Dentists' Pay

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to delay the implementation of the 1992-93 dentists' remuneration from 8 July to a date later in the year to allow the fundamental review of dentists' remuneration to be finalised; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: It would not be helpful to delay the implementation of a revised fee scale beyond July. In 1991-92, dentists received on average some £12,000 more than the level of pay agreed by the Government following the recommendation of the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration (DDRB). The evidence suggests that the existing fee scale is continuing to provide substantially more than the DDRB recommended.

In 1992-93, even with the 7 per cent. fee reduction proposed, the average dentist is likely to receive some £5,000 more than the DDRB recommendation of £35,815. This proposal is fair to dentists, fair to their patients, the tax-payers, and fair to other national health service staff.

Dental remuneration is a complex, sensitive and important issue. We are looking to the review to develop a system which more effectively and more fairly remunerates all dentists for the important work they do.

Peto Institute

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made with the undertaking to contribute towards the development of the International

Peto Institute in Budapest; whether other OECD countries have contributed; how much of the United Kingdom Government grant has been spent; if she will list the principal elements of the new Institute which have already been paid for, and which will be paid for in the remainder of this financial year; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The United Kingdom Government have undertaken to contribute £5 million towards the costs of establishing the International Peto Institute in Budapest, which will provide conductive education for children with physical disabilities and training in conductive education. We are not aware that other OECD countries have contributed. The United Kingdom Government have made an initial payment of £1,750,000. Our agreement with the Hungarian Government provides that subsequent payments will be dependent upon progress with construction.

Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue (excluding the Valuation Office) are departments operating fully on Next Steps lines with 30 executive units and 34 executive offices respectively. Gross control of running costs applies to both departments except in the case of Inland Revenue's Valuation Office which, as shown, operates as a free standing agency under net control.

A few agencies, such as the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, shown as operating under gross control, have limited freedom to utilise income to meet expenditure subject to guidelines agreed with the parent Department and the Treasury.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the current levels of outstanding appeals for (a) the Immigration Tribunal and (b) the Immigration Appeal Tribunal.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As at 31 May 1992, 27,879 cases were outstanding before immigration adjudicators and 552 before the Immigration Appeal Tribunal.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average period from the time the explanation statement is received by the Immigration Tribunal to the date for the hearing.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The current period from the time the explanatory statement is received by the Immigration Appellate Authorities (IAA) to the date of the hearing before the adjudicator can be shown as follows:

(a) The time from the date the explanatory statement is received by the IAA to the date copies of the case papers are dispatched to the parties' representatives in this country is up to five days;

(b) the time taken for the parties to prepare their case before indicating to the IAA that they are ready to proceed to a hearing averages six months;

(c) the time for the hearing to take place once the parties have indicated readiness to proceed to a hearing is from four weeks to six months.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many county court oficers are employed; and, of these, how many are (a) black, (b) Asian and (c) women.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of county court officers employed by the Lord Chancellor's Department is 5,018 at 12 June 1992. Approximately 78 per cent. of these have responded to the Department's ethnic origin questionnaire. Of the officers who have an ethnic record, 94 are black and 91 are Asian. A total of 3,382 of the officers are women.

Combined court centres deal with county and Crown court matters. A total of 2,484 officers work within the combined court centres. We are not able to distinguish the number who work solely on county court matters. Approximately 80 per cent. of combined court centre officers have responded to the Department's ethnic origin questionnaire. Of the offices who have an ethnic record, 13 are black and 35 are Asian. A total of 1,666 of the officers are women.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the number of district judges; and how many are (a) black, (b) Asian and (c) women.

Mr. John M. Taylor: On 1 June 1992 there were 266 district judges, including those in the principal registry of the Family Division of the High Court.

The ethnic origin of members of the judiciary and of applicants for judicial posts was not recorded prior to the autumn of 1991 and the formal records in respect of ethnic origin are therefore incomplete.

It is, however, believed that there are at present no black district judges. There is one Asian—who is a woman—and 18 women holding this office.

Legal Aid

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current level of expenditure for the year 1991-92 in England and Wales on legal aid in respect of (a) civil litigation and (b) criminal litigation; and what proposals he has to reduce such expenditure levels.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The estimated outturn of gross expenditure on legal aid in England and Wales in 1991-92 —excluding advice and assistance under the "green form" or duty solicitor schemes—is:

	£ million
Civil legal aid	540
Criminal legal aid	400

These figures represent an increase of 28 per cent. overall on the equivalent figures for 1990-91. The Lord Chancellor has announced measures, including the introduction of standard fees in the magistrates courts, which will help to control the rate of increase in legal aid costs in future.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are his proposals for establishing eligibility for legal aid within the framework of altered levels for legal aid expenditure.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The financial limits for legal aid are reviewed annually. Most limits were uprated by 7 per cent. in April. Financial eligibility is being considered more generally in the review of financial conditions.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to limit admissibility of applications for legal aid for less serious charges; and what criteria he proposes to apply.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is for the courts to decide whether to grant criminal legal aid in a particular case in accordance with the statutory criteria laid down by section 22 of the Legal Aid Act 1988.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department by what amounts he proposes to make alterations in the level of legal aid expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Future plans for legal aid expenditure are set out in the report on the Government's expenditure plans 1992-93 to 1994-95 for the Lord Chancellor's and Law Officers' Departments (Cm 1910) published in February 1992. The Lord Chancellor will if necessary seek additional provision for legal aid in the current financial year.

EDUCATION

Toxic Shock Syndrome

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidelines are available for school governing bodies on the content and organisation of sex education; and whether they include information on tampon-related toxic shock syndrome.

Mr. Forth: The Department's circular 11/87 includes advice to school governing bodies on their responsibilities for determining their policy both on sex education and on the content and organisation of any sex education to be offered. The National Curriculum Council has issued guidance to all maintained schools in England, offering advice on how schools might incorporate topics about sex education and personal hygiene into their wider programmes of health education. Neither of the documents discusses the detailed content of the curriculum, which is for school governing bodies and teachers to decide.

Departmental Staff

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many civil servants and educational advisers work for his Department.

Mr. Forman: The Department employs 2,471 civil servants. That figure includes 460 in Her Majesty's inspectorate, of whom the majority, together with their support staff, will transfer to the Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector, which is to be constituted as a separate non-ministerial department from 1 September 1992.

Parents Charter

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what progress has been made in implementing the parents charter commitments regarding the annual publication of comparative information about school performance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: I am today publishing regulations and a circular that begin to implement our commitment in the parents charter to provide improved information for parents and the wider community about the performance of all local schools. In particular, they set out the arrangements under which I will publish this November comparative tables of public examination results for schools in the area of each local education authority.

As a result, from autumn 1992, parents choosing among local secondary schools will be sent comparative tables showing school by school the latest public examination results and will find in each maintained school's prospectus, and in that of each city technology college, improved information on public examination results and truancy rates.

Secondary schools are also being asked to include in their prospectuses and governors' annual reports details of the routes that their pupils take at ages 16, 17 and 18, showing staying-on rates and the destinations of those who leave school.

Independent secondary schools are being asked to join in these arrangements voluntarily in 1992, and I expect that most will wish to do so.

The new arrangements were the subject of consultation with local authorities and others in January this year. As a result of that consultation, I have decided not to impose the requirement to publish comparative tables on local education authorities this year, but to arrange central publication and distribution through primary schools myself.

From 1993, further regulations to be made under the Education (Schools) Act 1992 will cover the complete parents charter commitments, securing by law the inclusion in comparative tables of all schools, including independent ones, and extending their scope to cover truancy rates, national curriculum assessment results and the routes taken by older pupils.

Parents and the wider community have a right to know what is being achieved by our schools for our children. I hope that schools will make every effort to meet our requirements and requests this year. Informed choice by parents is a valuable force for good in education, and we should make sure that choice is based on the best possible information.

Copies of the regulations and circular will be placed in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Byelaws

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what draft sea fisheries byelaws are currently awaiting his approval; and when these were first submitted to his Department.

Mr. Curry: Twenty-three formally made sea fisheries committees' (SFCs) byelaws are awaiting ministerial confirmation, which cannot be given until the necessary legal, technical and EC Commission considerations have been completed. Eight concern shell fisheries, of which five were submitted this year and three in May 1991; six, received in the last six months, deal with the extension of sea fishery districts from three to six miles; three are concerned with fixed engines, two of which were submitted in the last month; two byelaws on minimum landing sizes of fish were submitted in May 1991 and January 1992 and two on length of vessels in May 1991 and April 1992; one byelaw on areas where fishing for bass is allowed was submitted in May 1991 and one on gear type in January 1992. A further seven made byelaws are awaiting SFC confirmation on certain technical points.

Bird Culls

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for licences to cull (a) cormorants and (b) goosanders and mergansers in England and Wales were submitted to his Department in each of the past five years; and how many of these were granted.

Mr. Soames: The agriculture Departments in England and Wales do not issue licences to cull the species of bird in question. Licences are issued only to shoot a limited number of birds as an aid to scaring.

With regard to licences for the killing or taking of cormorants, the requested information on the number of applications received is not yet available for the Ministry's north-east regional service centre. Details for the rest of England and Wales are as follows:

Year	Applications received	Licences issued
1987	6	3
1988	4	2
1989	3	2
1990	9	4
1991	8	3

A completed table including the missing information will be provided as soon as possible.

On mergansers and goosanders, only one application has been received for a licence to shoot these species in the last five years, in Wales in 1988, and no licence was granted.

Salmon

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that annual salmon catch statistics are collated and published more quickly.

Mr. Curry: The collation and publication of salmon catch statistics in England and Wales are the responsibility of the National Rivers Authority. It is already taking steps to publish these statistics more quickly, and this is welcome.

Gill Nets

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has made of the effect of the ban on the carriage and use of monofilament gill nets in Scottish waters under the Inshore Fishing (Salmon and Migratory Trout) (Prohibition of Gill Nets) (Scotland) Order 1986 and the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Carriage of Monofilament Gill Nets) (Scotland) Order 1986; and if he will now use his powers under the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1967 to apply similar restrictions in English and Welsh waters.

Mr. Curry: The ban in Scottish waters was primarily introduced to protect salmon. The Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975, as amended by the Salmon Act 1986, provides for control of nets in English and Welsh inshore waters.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the figures on a county basis in England for 1991-92 of (a) the number of serious irregularities of the set-aside scheme, (b) the number of minor breaches of the scheme and (c) the number of cases where payments were withheld in full or in part; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The 1991-92 set-aside year runs from 1 October 1991 to 30 September 1992, with payments being made in the last quarter of 1992. Consequently, it is not yet possible to provide this information for the current set-aside year.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amount of payments under the set-aside scheme that have been recovered or withheld in each county in England in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Set-aside payments for 1991-92 will be made in the last quarter of 1992. Consequently it is not yet possible to provide this information.

Clenbuterol

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the measures in force to stop the import of beef cattle fed with the drug clenbuterol.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 11 June 1992]: Under European Community rules, primary responsibility for ensuring that beef cattle fed with clenbuterol do not move between member states rests with the member states of origin. Thereafter, animals imported into Great Britain from other member states are subject to surveillance at the port of entry and to ante mortem inspection at the slaughterhouse. All animals, including imported animals, are also subject to the routine Great Britain residue surveillance programme on farm and at slaughterhouses as required under Community rules.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which executive agencies have had their framework document amended since their establishment.

Mr. Waldegrave: This is primarily a matter for departmental ministers and the chief executives of the agencies for which they are responsible. However, our records show that four agencies have had their framework documents amended since their establishment.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Press Complaints

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he intends to publish concerning a statutory press complaints commission.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have made it clear that they intend to review the effectiveness of press self-regulation over the period from 1 January 1991 to 30 June 1992. The proposals and the form of their publication will be decided in the light of that review. I shall make a further announcement about the nature of the review shortly.

British Library

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he plans to review the British Library St. Pancras project.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. I am commissioning consultants: to establish whether the current budget for stage 1A and the completion phase of the St. Pancras project is adequate and whether the strategy and organisation for procurement of the completion phase are likely to be the most effective means of ensuring the timely and successful conclusion of the project; to audit the status and quality of the design information for the completion phase; to review the status of the British library's projects for the occupation of the new building, including the reliability of cost estimates for the work; to formalise the role of the British library in relation to the building project; and subsequently to audit the status of documentation for the procurement of the completion phase to ensure that it is unambiguous, precise and comprehensive.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Computer Services

Mr. Page: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what progress is being made towards implementing the proposals in the fourth report from the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services) of Session 1989-90 on computer services for Members (HC 614).

Mr. Beith: The Services Committee report, which was generally welcomed in an Adjournment debate on 8 July last year, proposed the installation of a new broad-band cable system throughout the parliamentary estate capable of carrying television channels, the annunciator system, and data traffic, and recommended that appropriate studies be made to identify the specifications of such a system and the information technology services which might be provided for Members, their staff and staff of the House.

In the light of the debate, the House of Commons Commission gave immediate authority for the initial studies proposed by the Services Committee to be undertaken by consultants. In December 1991, the Commission authorised further expenditure, of up to £200,000 in financial year 1991-92, and up to £180,000 in financial year 1992-93, for further investigative and exploratory work towards the possible introduction of two parallel networks—one to carry television communications, and the second to carry data traffic—as recommended in the consultants' initial report. The Commission also invited the newly appointed Information Committee to liaise with the consultants, the relevant Officers of the two Houses, and the appropriate committee in the House of Lords, in the further development of plans for such a system.

The Commission is grateful to the former Information Committee, to the joint working party established by them, and to the Officers concerned, for the progress which has been made during the early part of this year.

At its meeting on 18 May, the Commission approved expenditure of about £720,500 in the current financial year to facilitate the installation of a pilot network project, as recommended by the Information Committee, in the new temporary accommodation to be provided in the autumn of this year at No. 7 Millbank. The Commission understands that this pilot scheme will assist the Information Committee—and the appropriate committee of the House of Lords—in reaching final conclusions about the nature of any network which they would wish to see installed in the parliamentary estate as a whole.

Any network for the House as a whole is likely to be expensive to install and thereafter to operate. For this reason, the Commission is concerned to ensure that no final decisions are taken until a clear picture of the likely commitments has emerged and the full costs have been carefully and expertly scrutinised. It therefore intends to invite the new Finance and Services Committee to assess and make recommendations to the Commission about the financial implications of any scheme which may be proposed by the Information Committee, in accordance with the consultative arrangements provided under Standing Orders Nos. 125 (Domestic Committees) and 125A (Finance and Services Committee).

Finally, in accordance with long-established practice, the Commission will not feel able to seek estimate provision for a major new service of this kind until the service itself has been specifically approved by the House. This stage cannot be reached until the Information Committee has had an opportunity to evaluate and report on the complex issues involved, and until the Finance and Services Committee has had an opportunity fully to evaluate the financial implications of any proposed scheme.

PRIME MINISTER

India

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister when he next expects to visit India; and what matters he plans to discuss.

The Prime Minister: I look forward to visiting India when dates can be agreed. The issues for discussion would be decided nearer the time.

Expo '92 Fair

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the cost of the British pavilion at the Expo '92 Fair in Seville; which Minister was present at the opening ceremony; and what consideration in regard to the local ecology were taken into account in the preparation and construction of the United Kingdom pavilion.

The Prime Minister: The British pavilion at Expo '92 cost £14 million to construct. Its design is environmentally sensitive, using sails and water as shields from the sun, thus reducing its energy consumption substantially. Sir John Ure, United Kingdom Commissioner General, represented Britain at the Expo '92 opening ceremony.

Earth Summit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out for each Government Department represented at the Earth summit in Rio de Janeiro, the number, grade and role of the 24 officials and eight junior support staff in the United Kingdom delegation; if he will list the title of each document submitted to the Rio de Janeiro conference; and what responses were made to each document.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Environment and Countryside gave on 9 June 1992, column 147.

The Government submitted the following documents to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development secretariat:

"This Common Inheritance": 1990 Environment White Paper.

"This Common Inheritance": first-year report.

United Nations Environment Programme United Kingdom's non-governmental organisation Agenda 21 report.

Local government statement on United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources' "Caring for the Earth" report; and Inter-Agency Committee on Global and Environmental Change report on United Kingdom research.

No formal response has been received to any of the documents as they were submitted for information only.

Peace Dividend

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what level of peace dividend he expects the United Kingdom to achieve over the next five years on current Government policies.

The Prime Minister: The Government's expenditure plans for the next three years were set out by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Autumn Statement (Cm 1729). These show the underlying cost of the defence programme being reduced significantly in real terms. No decisions have yet been taken on expenditure in later years. The Government remain committed to the maintenance of a strong and effective defence for the United Kingdom and its interests.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the long-term target for public spending as a proportion of gross domestic product compared to present levels and those of 1982.

Mr. Portillo: The Government's objective is that public spending should take a declining share of national income over time. The ratio of public spending to GDP is expected to be 43 per cent. this year. This compares with a ratio of 47½ per cent. in 1982-83.

Maxwell Group

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will meet the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board to discuss publication of the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation report on the Maxwell affair.

Mr. Nelson: I intend to meet the chairman soon to discuss a range of issues.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current cost to the Exchequer of mortgage interest tax relief.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of mortgage interest tax relief for 1992-93 is provisionally estimated at £5·8 billion.

Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the reduction in income tax in 1992-93 compared with the 1978-79 indexed regime broken down into the top 1 per cent., 5 per cent., 10 per cent. and bottom 50 per cent. of taxpayers showing the total reduction and the average gain.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 18 June 1992]: Latest estimates of the annual change in income tax liability resulting from the changes in tax rates, allowances, and thresholds are in the table. The 1978-79 income tax regime has been indexed to 1992-93 levels by reference to the statutory formula, and allowing for independent taxation.

For the purposes of these calculations, the indexed regime of 1978-79 has been applied directly to the income base of 1992-93. In practice, retention of the 1978-79 regime, indexed as appropriate, for the intervening years would have led to changes in the income base.

Reductions in income tax per individual[1] in 1992-93 compared with the 1978-79 indexed regime

Quantile group of individual taxpayers	Total reduction at 1992-93 prices £ million	Average reduction at 1992-93 prices £
Top 1 per cent.	8,700	33,300
Top 5 per cent.	13,100	10,000
Top 10 per cent.	15,200	6,000
Bottom 50 per cent.	4,800	400
All taxpayers	31,400	1,200

TRANSPORT

Network SouthEast

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will require British Rail, when reporting on its compliance with the quality of service objectives for Network SouthEast, to specify the reasons for late running or cancellations of services.

Mr. Freeman: I expect Network SouthEast to tell passengers the reasons for delays and cancellations as they happen.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the criteria for eligibility for the orange badge scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have no plans to review the eligibility criteria. New regulations were introduced on 2 March following a major review which looked at all aspects of the scheme, including the eligibility criteria. It would be premature to contemplate any further changes until we see how the new regulations are working.

East-West Routes

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his officials have had with officers of Oxfordshire county council about extending the east-west route beyond the Buckinghamshire-Oxfordshire border.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Since July 1989, my officials have had six formal meetings with officials of Oxfordshire county council about the strategy for extending the east-west route from west of Aylesbury to Oxford. In addition, they gave a presentation to the council's officers and members in July 1991, and my predecessor received a delegation of officers and members led by the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) in December 1991.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish the terms of reference he has set for the study of the need for a new east-west strategic route between Kent and Hampshire; and who has been commissioned to carry out the study.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We will not consider making a start on the Kent-Hampshire study until work now in progress on the construction of a regional traffic model is further advanced.

Road Grants

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on which occasions, in the past five years, he has offered 100 per cent. grants to highway authorities for the construction of particular roads; and what criteria he operates when determining whether to provide 100 per cent. grants for local road schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In the past five years the Department has offered 100 per cent. grants to local highway authorities for the road schemes:

A15 Laggan and Redbourne bypass, Humberside
A120 Stansted-Braintree, Essex
A418 Leighton Linslade bypass, Bedfordshire
A602 Little Wymondley bypass, Hertfordshire
A418 Wing bypass, Buckinghamshire
A134 Fornham St. Martin, Suffolk
Black Country Spine road, West Midlands
M56-A6 (M), Manchester airport link road (central section)
A15-A16 Market Deeping-Deeping St. James bypass, Lincolnshire
A158 Scremby, Lincolnshire

Our practice is to use this power sparingly for roads which will be trunked on completion, where the local highway authority has made such progress that significant delay would be caused if the scheme were promoted by the Department.

Inspectorate

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to set up an inspectorate for public transport.

Mr. Freeman: There are already a number of inspectorates and similar bodies responsible for overseeing various aspects of public transport. We have no plans to create any new inspectorate.

British Rail (Privatisation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will provide a list of the accountancy firms which are advising him for the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte is advising on liberalisation of access to the rail network.

East London River Crossing

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to answer the letters sent to him by the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford on 13 January and 13 February regarding the east London river crossing; what recent communications he has had with the European Commission about the proposal; and what steps he now plans to take in respect of the proposal.

Mr. Norris: I am sorry that the hon. Member did not receive a reply to her letters. The United Kingdom sent its response to the European Commission's article 169 letter on 17 December. There have since been informal discussions with the Commission. Its formal response has not yet been received. In the meantime, preparatory work towards the construction of the east London river crossing continues but no contracts for the construction of this important and urgently needed scheme have yet been let.

Marine Safety

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in implementing (a) recommendations 5, 15 and 17, (b) 20 and 24, (c) 4 and (d) 19 of the marine accident investigation branch report into the Marchioness disaster.

Mr. Norris: Recommendation 5 is to be given legislative force by regulations. A consultative document was issued in January 1992, and it is planned to bring these regulations into force in Autumn 1992.

On recommendation 15, a consultative document was issued in September 1991 and it is planned to bring these regulations into force in Autumn 1992.

A consultative document on recommendation 17 was issued in September 1991. It is planned to bring regulations in respect of river craft into force in Autumn 1992.

A revised consultative document on recommendations 20 and 24 was issued in November 1991, and it is planned to bring the two sets of regulations into force in Autumn 1992.

On recommendation 4, action in respect of United Kingdom ships has been completed; the longer-term development of internationally applicable requirements depends upon the success of our proposals at the International Maritime Organisation, which will be considered in December 1992.

Action on recommendation 19 was completed in February 1992.

Roads, Coventry

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to give his decision on the Coventry north-south road, phase 1; and what assessment he has made of the effect of this scheme on the economy and the environment in Coventry, North-East.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Decisions on the Coventry city council north-south orders and scheme are expected in early July. The responsibility for the assessment of the effect of the scheme on Coventry, North-East is essentially one for the local authority that sponsored the scheme. However, these issues were covered at the inquiries and have been reported on by the inspector. The Secretary of State will give full consideration to the report before making his decision.

ENVIRONMENT

Ofwat

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the role, responsibilities and powers of the Office of Water Services to ensure effective limitation of charges to the consumer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Present legislation gives the Director General of Water Services the powers he needs to fulfil his role of controlling increases in charges and protecting consumers.

Council Tax

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost so far of carrying out valuations in preparation for the introduction of council tax; what is his estimate of the total cost; and when he expects the completion of valuations in preparation for the introduction of the council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: The cost of valuing 19 million properties in England for council tax and producing valuation lists is expected to be £70 million. To date, payments of some £30 million have been made by my Department to the Valuation Office Agency, which is responsible for supervising the valuation exercise. Private sector valuers have now, subject to quality control procedures, completed their work. The Valuation Office Agency expects to complete its own valuation work in the near future and to schedule.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the planning inspectorate; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. Baldry: The first degree of the chief executive is Master of Arts—having read geography—of Cambridge university.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the maximum salary payable, including performance-related element, and the length of time of the contract of the chief executive of the planning inspectorate.

Mr. Baldry: The maximum salary payable to the chief executive is £55,700 per annum. His term of appointment ends with his retirement in September 1994.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the planning inspectorate as an agency; and whether the cost was borne by the parent department or the new agency.

Mr. Baldry: The total amount spent was £12,300, all borne by the agency.

Housing Finance, Harrogate

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total sum received from the sale of council houses by the Harrogate borough council in 1991-92.

Mr. Baldry: During 1991-92 Harrogate borough council received £1·642 million from the sale of 73 council dwellings.

Carlisle City Council

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what receipts have been received by Carlisle city council in each year since 1987 through the sale of council houses, land and other buildings.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is given in the table

Carlisle DC: Total Sales of Fixed Assets

	£'000
1987-88	5,926
1988-89	6,619

1991-92	[1]2,268

[1] Provisional

Air Quality

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what air quality tests have been carried out in the county of Durham since 1987; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Maclean: Airborne concentrations of smoke and sulphur dioxide and acid deposition have been measured at Government monitoring sites in the county since 1987 —and for some years before. A survey of nitrogen dioxide concentrations was undertaken last year as part of our national study to compare results of an earlier survey in 1986. All the monitoring results have been published in reports by Warren Spring laboratory and copies have been placed in the Library.

Environmental Reports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will make arrangements to obtain the annual environmental reports produced by companies registered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: There is no statutory requirement on companies registered in the United Kingdom to produce annual environmental reports. However, I very much welcome the increasing trend for companies to report on their environmental performance, and my Department is glad to receive such reports.

Rivers (Flows)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what report he has received from the National Rivers Authority on the progress of the campaign to combat low flows in 20 designated English rivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The National Rivers Authority programme for ameliorating low flows in certain rivers is being discussed with the relevant water companies. There is continuing discussion of the programme between the NRA and the Department in the context of the annual corporate plan on which grant-in-aid decisions are based.

Caravans

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish a consultation paper on caravan sites.

Mr. Baldry: We are working with all practicable speed, and hope to issue shortly a consultation paper to fulfil our manifesto undertaking to review the Caravan Sites Act 1968 with the aim of reducing the nuisance of illegal camping by travellers.

Marsham Street Site

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to progress the sale or redevelopment of the site at 2 Marsham street.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has appointed Montagu Evans in association with St. Quintin to advise on the planning and development potential of the site at 2 Marsham street. This advice is a necessary precursor to any decisions on sale or redevelopment. Decisions will be taken in due course in the light of this advice and the Government's need for accommodation in the Westminster area.

Refrigerants

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decisions he has made following recent consultations on the Government's proposal to ban the import and supply to the United Kingdom market of refrigerant in disposable containers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: In view of the clear environmental benefits, and with the support expressed by the refrigeration industry, we have decided to proceed with a ban on disposable containers. The use of such containers leads to emissions of ozone-depleting substances causing damage to the ozone layer, because the heel of chlorofluorocarbons that remains is usually vented to the atmosphere before disposal of the cylinder. Furthermore, containers that are designed to be thrown away rather than reused act are a disincentive to good practice in the industry and particularly to the recovery and recycling of CFCs. In the light of the views expressed in the consultation, we have now decided that the ban should apply to all sizes of disposable container, with an exemption for research and development. The legislation, which will be introduced as soon as possible, will require EC approval.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

The Attorney-General: Proposals for market testing relating to the Departments for which I am responsible are being considered, together with those relating to other Government Departments, and an announcement will be made shortly.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration has been given by the Director of Public Prosecutions to the prosecution of those alleged by the "World in Action" television programme of 15 June to be trading in anabolic steroids; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 June 1992]: There is no record of any Scottish Office department or agency having used the services of the Communication Scotland advertising agency.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Leningrad Model Farm

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress the Overseas Development Administration has made with the establishment of a model farm in the Leningrad Oblast.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A mission, sponsored by the joint assistance unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, visited the Agrarian university and Pushkinskoye training farm near St. Petersburg from 29 March to 3 April 1992 to carry out a feasibility study on the establishment of a private farming company.

The mission's main recommendation was that a detailed business development plan for the Pushkinskoye farm should be prepared as a precursor to implementing a project expected to last between 18 and 36 months. This recommendation has been accepted and we hope that work on the business development plan will begin shortly.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Overseas Development Administration's review of aid and trade provision, mentioned in the Foreign Affairs Committee fourth special report, Session 1991-92, on Foreign and Commonwealth Office/Overseas Development Administration expenditure 1992, annex 4 will be completed; and whether he will publish the results.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This review by officials has now been completed and is under consideration by Ministers. No decision on publication has been taken.

Aid

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the discussion of untying EC aid at the last Council of Ministers meeting; and what proposals Her Majesty's Government have to raise the issue further.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: At the Council of EC Development Ministers on 4 May, there was a wide-ranging but inconclusive discussion of a Commission paper which considered possible ways to untie member states' bilateral development aid at Community level. The Council asked the Commission to submit a new document for its next meeting in November.

Africa

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how much aid the Government have committed so far for the current emergency situation in southern Africa on a country-by-country basis;

(2) whether he is prepared to give more aid to southern Africa in response to the recent appeals of Governments in the region.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has so far committed more than £38 million in response to the drought in southern Africa as follows:

Country	Allocation £'000	Description
Lesotho	25	Support for non-governmental organisation activities
Malawi	6,000	Humanitarian assistance to be allocated
	1,000	Emergency feeding programme
	67	Support for non-governmental organisation activities
Mozambique	3,900	Food aid
	1,420	Support for non-governmental organisation activities
Namibia	45	Support for non-governmental organisation activities
South Africa	215	Support for non-governmental organisation activities
Swaziland	42	Support for non-governmental organisation activities
Tanzania	28	Support for non-governmental organisation activities
Zambia	10,000	Balance of payments support
	237	Support for non-governmental organisation activities

	124	Support for non-governmental organisation activities
	791	Other drought-related assistance
Unallocated	1,925	Non-governmental organisation support/TC assistance
	5,000	Food aid (intended mainly for Mozambique)
Total	38,319

In addition to the above, Britain is contributing a further £12·5 million to the cost of food aid (364,300 tonnes) allocated to the countries of southern Africa under the European Community's special food aid programme.

The Government will continue to monitor the situation closely and are considering what additional assistance they can make available.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid is planned for refugees and displaced people in southern Africa; what assistance is being considered by the United Kingdom to displaced people in Khartoum; and if he will seek action by the United Nations to protect displaced people in Khartoum and to provide access to those in need in Mogadishu.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are providing assistance, both directly and through the World Food Programme and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and our share of EC actions, to Mozambican refugees and displaced people. We recently made a donation of 5,000 tonnes of food aid for Mozambican refugees in Malawi. We have also made an initial allocation of £2·5 million for emergency and rehabilitation projects in Mozambique which will benefit displaced, as well as drought and war-affected, people. In Angola we have contributed £100,000 to help the United Nations Development Programme to co-ordinate relief operations in that country.

We recently donated 2,000 tonnes of food worth £530,000 to displaced people in Khartoum, bringing the total of our assistance to this group since 1991 to £1·09 million. We continue to give close support to United Nations-led efforts to negotiate better treatment for the displaced and secure access for relief supplies and non-governmental organisation personnel.

We fully support current United Nations efforts to provide relief to the needy in Mogadishu. In 1992, we have donated humanitarian aid worth £3·6 million, including 12,100 tonnes of bilateral food aid. Following the ceasefire agreed by the rival factions in March, food is now being delivered to Mogadishu by the World Food Programme (WFP) and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC).

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being offered for recovery and rehabilitation in (a) Somalia, (b) Ethiopia, (c) Eritrea, (d) Namibia and (e) Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom is providing assistance for recovery and rehabilitation as follows:

Somalia: Our emergency aid, valued at some £10 million since January 1991—including our share of EC assistance—includes finance for projects addressing rehabilitation needs.

Ethiopia and Eritrea: Under the bilateral programme, we are continuing to support rehabilitation projects in the natural resources sector through non-governmental organisations. We shall also be making a significant contribution to the process of recovery through our share of actions planned by the World bank and the European Community. Our humanitarian aid, valued at over £53 million since January 1991, including our share of EC assistance, also includes finance for emergency projects with a rehabilitation element.

Namibia: The bilateral aid programme, totalling some £2·4 million in 1991-92 covers activities in a number of key sectors, including education, public administration and the police.

Angola: We are now processing proposals to rehabilitate water supplies and a bridge.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer on 22 May to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden), Official Report, columns 339-46, concerning wages councils, if she will give details as to the two prosecutions for underpayment of wages in Scotland in 1991; which employers were prosecuted; and if she will publish details of the offences.

(2) how many 16 and 17-year-olds in Sunderland completed their YTS placements in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991 and subsequently obtained full-time employment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Information is, however, available on the percentages of all YT leavers in the Wearside training and enterprise council area, which includes Sunderland, as follows:

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available in the form requested.

Youth training entrants' needs are assessed by training providers. If trainees need to develop their literacy and numeracy skills and word power/number power is appropriate, the training provider will make it available as a matter of course.

The results of these assessments are not separately collated.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds in Sunderland have been assessed as needing special needs youth training scheme placements in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991; and what is the latest available figure for 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of school leavers assessed by the Careers Service as special needs in the Wearside training and enterprise council area in 1990-91 was 1,100. The figure for 1991-92 was 900. Figures for 1992-93 will not be available until late summer when all the young people concerned have left school and registered with the Careers Service.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places are available on youth training schemes in Sunderland for (a) number power and (b) word power in (1) 1990 and (2) 1991; and what is the latest available figure for 1992.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The year 1992-93 is the first in which targets have been set by the Department for word power and number power. Wearside training and enterprise council has contracted to achieve 200 word power/number power certificates this financial year.

Figures for earlier years are not available.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places were available for 16 and 17-year-olds in Sunderland on youth training schemes in (1) 1990, (2) 1991; and what is the latest figure for 1992.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department of Employment contracts with training and enterprise councils for provision of training weeks in youth training. The actual contracted training weeks figures for the years requested are:

	Numbers
1990-91	143,599
1991-92	157,790
1992-93	[1]142,150

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training scheme places there were for 16 and 17-year-olds in Sunderland for individuals with special needs in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991; and what is the latest available figure for 1992.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Unemployed young people are guaranteed an appropriate training opportunity in youth training. It follows that the number of special needs training places provided is consistent with demand. To date, Wearside training and enterprise council has met the guarantee to unemployed young people in its area.

The proportion of youth training entrants with special needs is approximately 30 per cent. In numerical terms provision of special needs training is estimated as:

	Number

A copy of the guide is in the Library of the House. Decisions in individual cases are determined by the board in the light of all relevant circumstances.

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the Wireless and Telegraphy Act 1949 to ensure that television sets can be used in prison cells without individual television licences being required.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice, The Way Ahead for the Prison Service in England and Wales" announced that carefully monitored experiments would be held in a small number of prisons to help determine whether and under what conditions there might be opportunities for televisions in cells.

Bail Offenders

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute a full departmental inquiry into the serious crimes committed by persons on bail, following the case of Andrew Hagans, convicted at Bristol Crown court on 10 June.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 June 1992]: Although I fully understand and share the concern that has been widely expressed about the implications of this case, I have no plans to institute any formal inquiry. I can assure the hon. Member, however, that lessons learnt from cases such as this are always taken into account in developing policy. Steps have already been taken and others are in train to reduce the risk of such incidents occurring again. They include, but are not limited to, the measures to which my right hon. Friend the Member for Mole Valley (Mr. Baker) referred in his statement on 25 February, Official Report, columns 813-14.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what were the social fund allocations to individual DSS offices in Cumbria for each year since 1988;

(2) how many applications were made to the Barrow-in-Furness DSS office for (a) loans and (b) grants from the social fund in each year since 1988; and how many of these applications were successful;

(3) what was the total value of community care grants from the social fund made to applicants covered by the Barrow-in-Furness DSS office in each year since 1988.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the Library.

War Pension Claims

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for war pension on the basis, or partly on the basis, of psychiatric disability made between 1962 and 1980 were disallowed for the reason that the disability was not regarded as attributable to war service by virtue of its nature being a medical diagnosis of psychosis schizophrenia; in how many of such claims the refusal of pension or reduction in award has been reviewed in the light of his Department's acceptance of post-traumatic stress disorder as an accepted diagnosis leading to psychiatric disability; how many such reviews have led to war pension being paid in respect of such disability; and in how many such cases of successful review arrears of war pension, on the basis of such disability, have been paid for periods of disability prior to 1980.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the total cost of paying full arrears of war pension to those claimants now regarded as entitled by virtue of a diagnosis of post-traumatic stress disorder calculating those arrears as from the date of their disability instead of from 1980.

Miss Widdecombe: Awards of war pension in respect of conditions accepted as attributable to service which could be described as "post-traumatic stress disorders"—for instance, conditions formerly diagnosed as "anxiety state" or neurasthenia—have normally been made from the date of claim. The date of 1980 for the payment of arrears of war pension is of significance only in so far as claims in respect of schizophrenia are concerned.

Child Benefit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the social security regulations to ensure that young people aged 16 and 17 years who cannot find a place on youth training schemes can have their entitlement to child benefit restored for that period during which they do not receive unemployment benefit or income support and that parents be allowed increased benefits geared to child benefits where appropriate.

Mr. Burt: No. The Government believe that the current provisions for young people provide appropriate support to those waiting for a youth training place. Parents of such young people can already get child benefit for up to 16 weeks after their children leave school. Young people who are seeking a YT place whose parents are themselves dependent on income support may be entitled to income support in their own right under the severe hardship provision.

Maxwell Group

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has set a target date for the return of Maxwell funds held in institutions abroad; and what action he is taking to bring this about.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 16 June at column 489.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on the conference held in Liechtenstein on 17 June on the Maxwell funds;

(2) if his Department was represented at the conference held in Liechtenstein on 19 June on the Maxwell funds; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department was not represented at the conference on Maxwell trusts which was held in Liechtenstein on 17 June, but which has been widely reported subsequently. It is primarily for the liquidators of the Maxwell investment management companies to establish the extent to which funds may have been transferred to Liechtenstein. However, where the special unit which we have established can make a useful contribution, it will do all it can to assist the liquidators, the trustees and others in securing the maximum return of assets to Maxwell pension funds.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to meet ministers in Switzerland and Liechtenstein to discuss the return of Maxwell funds to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans at present to meet Ministers in Liechtenstein or Switzerland to discuss disputed Maxwell pension fund assets.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the funding procedures for the emergency, short-term help for Maxwell pensioners he announced on 8 June.

Mr. Lilley: I announced on 8 June that the Government were making available temporary funding of £2·5 million, in the form of repayable grants to help ease the short-term pressures faced by Maxwell pensioners. Parliamentary approval of this new service will be sought in a supplementary estimate for class XIV Department of Social Security, vote 3. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £2·5 million will be met by repayable advances from the contingency fund.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average proportion of the 10 years prior to attaining state pension age spent in paid work by (a) and (b) women.

Miss Widdecombe: The 1991 labour force survey (GB) showed that 61·7 per cent. of men between the ages of 55 and 64, and 58·6 per cent. of women between the ages of 50 and 59, were in paid employment—paid employment is defined as a minimum of one hour per week. Further information in the form requested is available only at disproportionate cost.

HEALTH

Elderly Care Beds

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many care of the elderly beds were available in the Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool health authorities each year since 1988.

Mr. Yeo: The information is given in the table.

The fall in number of elderly care beds during this period is due to the provision of better alternative community-based services provided by Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool health authorities, in accordance with the initiatives outlined in the White Paper "Caring for People".

Community Care (Funding)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ring-fence the money allocated to communities under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990; and what criteria she will use to determine allocations.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have made it clear that if necessary they will use their powers in full to ensure that authorities do not misuse funds intended for community care. We are continuing to discuss with the local authority associations the funding of new community care arrangements.

Maternity Services

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide the current average cost to public funds of a normal birth at (a) hospital and (b) home.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in the form requested.

The average cost of care during pregnancy and childbirth in the hospital and community health services in 1990-91 was £1,217 per birth. This includes obstetric in-patient and out-patient services and community midwifery but excludes services provided by general practitioners.

Cancer

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the percentage of the population who will develop cancer; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Statistical analysis of data relating to the period 1985 to 1987 suggests that approximately one third of the population of England and Wales will, at some point in their lives, be registered with a malignant cancer. More detailed data are published in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys publication "Cancer statistics: registrations 1986", series MB1 No. 19, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action her Department is taking against those found or believed to be engaged in fraudulent import and trading of anabolic steroids; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Any reports of illegal importation or suspected illegal importation of anabolic steroids into the United Kingdom are urgently investigated by the enforcement unit of the Medicines Control Agency, as are reports of illegal trading in anabolic steroids.

Abortions

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the abortions performed under the new grounds and conditions created by the amendments to the Abortion Act 1967 by section 37 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1991 were performed after (a) 24 weeks and (b) 28 weeks.

Mr. Sackville: In the period 1 April 1991 to 30 September 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, a total of 32 abortions were performed in Great Britain after 24 weeks' gestation. Of these, seven were performed after 28 weeks' gestation.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports of inspections carried out by local health authority inspectors of private clinics providing abortions are received by her Department; and if she will publish them.

Mr. Sackville: Reports of health authority inspections are retained locally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the complication rate associated with abortions conducted at each of the private abortion clinics; and what was the national complication rate for each of the years (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and (d) 1991.

Mr. Sackville: Aggregated details of complications are included on the abortion notification form sent to the chief medical officer and are published on an England and Wales basis in tables 16 and 17 of the "Annual Abortion Statistics"—series AB No. 15 (1988), No. 16 (1989) and No. 17 (1990), published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys—copies of which are available in the Library. The 1991 information is not yet available. The complication rates in places approved under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967 are monitored by the Department, but information about individual places is not published.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many NHS hospitals are currently using macerators to dispose of the remains of pre-born children;

(2) how many health authorities have complied with guidelines issued to them by her Department regarding the disposal of pre-born children and their remains.

Mr. Sackville: I am not aware that any hospitals are currently using macerators for the purpose in question. The guidance issued by the Department to the NHS in November last year requires that the use of maceration and sluicing methods of disposal should cease by no later than 1 January 1992. Additional guidance on the sensitive disposal of the dead fetus and fetal tissue was issued to the NHS in December 1991. Compliance with this guidance is a matter for individual health authorities.

Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the reports compiled by inspectors from her Department regarding the private clinics providing abortion inspected by them.

Mr. Sackville: No. These reports contain confidential information.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all places currently approved under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967 together with the names of their proprietors and any company name associated with their clinic or advice agency together with the names of any company directors.

Mr. Sackville: A list of places currently approved under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967, together with the names of their proprietors, is held in the Library. Information about related companies and directors' names is provided to the Department on a "commercial in confidence" basis and cannot therefore be disclosed.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines on the counselling of mothers before and after abortion are issued by her Department; whether these are binding on the NHS and private clinics; what checks are conducted to ensure the quality of counselling; and if she will place a copy of such guidelines in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: Guidance on arrangements for counselling women seeking abortion was issued in 1977—circular HC(77)26—to the national health service and places approved under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967. This remains current and a copy is available in the Library. Compliance in the NHS is a matter for individual health authorities. In the private sector, counselling arrangements are checked by the Department's officials in the course of their regular unannounced inspection visits to places approved under the Abortion Act 1967.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her policy regarding the institution of a system to record the actual handicap suffered by a pre-born child aborted on grounds of disability.

Mr. Sackville: The notification form for each abortion requires the operating practitioner to state the main medical condition for the abortion. Ground E of the Abortion Act 1967, as amended, allows an abortion where there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped. In such cases, there is a requirement to provide on the notification form information about the condition of the woman, and the fetus. Additionally, where abortions take place after 24 weeks' gestation, a full statement of the medical condition of the fetus is required.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department receives copies of the annual reports and accounts of the companies that provide abortion in private clinics together with the reports and accounts of any parent or subsidiary companies.

Mr. Sackville: No.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is issued by her Department on the definitions of substantial risk and seriously handicapped in the grounds under which a pre-born child may be aborted for disability; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Decisions as to what constitutes "substantial risk" and "seriously handicapped" within the grounds specified in the Abortion Act 1967 are matters for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned, taking account of the facts and circumstances of each case.

Food Safety

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure that residents are not denied the therapeutic or rehabilitative benefit of participation in catering and domestic tasks in residential homes for elderly people as a result of the application of regulations consequent on the Food Safety Act 1970.

Mr. Sackville: Nobody in residential or sheltered accommodation is precluded from taking part in the preparation of food. The Food Hygiene (General) Regulations 1970, as amended, set out the controls necessary for the hygienic preparation of food. Environmental health departments advise on controls bearing in mind the nature of any food safety risk, including the type of food handled and the preparation involved.

DEFENCE

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all those functions and areas in his Department and associated agencies that have been identified for market testing in the wake of the White Paper "Competing for Quality".

Mr. Aitken: The Department's policy is that all defence support functions should be performed by the private sector unless there are overriding and clearly proven operational reasons for retaining them in-house, or definite value-for-money advantages. Our market testing programme therefore extends across all areas of the Department and its agencies.

Ministry Police

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the operational support unit of the Ministry of Defence police was moved to RAF Wethersfield.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The operational support unit moved to Wethersfield on Friday 1 May 1992 as planned.

Redundancy

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the rights to redundancy payments of soldiers in (a) the British Army and (b) each of the armies of the other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation member states.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Soldiers made redundant with less than 22 years, but at least 12 years service from age 18, will receive an immediate pension calculated as a proportion of the 22 years rate based on their length of service and rank held. They will also receive a tax-free terminal grant of three times the annual rate of pension. In addition, special capital payments of up to 18 months' pay are also payable, related to the length of service and annual rate of pay. These payments are also tax free.

Soldiers with less than 12 years' service will receive a special capital payment of up to 19 months' pay based on their years of completed service and annual pay. If they have more than two years' service, they will also be awarded a preserved pension and terminal grant of three times the rate of pension payable at age 60.

My Department has little information on redundancy payments made to the forces of the other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation member states. Many of the European nations have conscript armies. In the American army, I understand redundancy payments are made to service personnel with between six and 18 years' service. Payment equates to one tenth of the annual basic salary for each completed year of service, and is taxable. Service of less than 20 years does not qualify for any form of pension. Personnel with 20 or more years service receive a pension. Anyone with 18 years of service is allowed to serve on to the 20-year point to qualify for a pension.

Army Pay

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the basic annual pay of a soldier of the rank (a) private, (b) corporal, (c) sergeant, (d) second lieutenant, (e) captain, (f) colonel, (g) major general and (h) field marshal in (i) the British Army and (ii) each of the armies of the other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation member states.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Tables of annual pay rates for members of the armed forces are contained in the 21st report of the review body on armed forces pay, Cm 1815, for ranks up to brigadier, and the 14th report on top salaries, Cm 1413, for ranks above brigadier. The Government have implemented in full the recommendations contained in both reports. The Ministry of Defence does not have equivalent figures for the armies of other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation member states.

WALES

Abortions

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total number of abortions performed in Wales under the Abortion Act 1967 since its implementation; and how many and what percentage of these abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The total number of abortions performed in Wales and notified under the Abortion Act 1967 in the period since its implementation until the end of September 1991, which is the latest date for which information is available, was 83,015. Of these, seven were performed in emergency to save the life of the woman; this represents 0·008 per cent. of the total.

Fisheries Byelaws

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he now expects to approve the draft sea fisheries byelaws for north Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Following receipt of the proposed byelaws in 1991, consideration by the Department and discussions with the promoters identified the need for some modifications. The promoters have recently submitted revised versions of the byelaws, which are now being considered before a final decision is made.

Community Charge

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the numbers of people charged and prosecuted for non-payment of the community charge so far.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not held centrally.

Homelessness

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the number of homeless people in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: During the quarter October to December 1991, there were 5,550 people in households accepted as homeless by local authorities under part III of the Housing Act 1985.

Beef Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the beef industry in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government recognise the difficult conditions that have faced the beef sector in recent years and have introduced a number of measures designed to assist specialist beef producers. At the EC level, intervention policies have proved a costly and inefficient method of supporting the beef industry. That is why, in our negotiations to reform the common agricultural policy, we insisted on resources being switched away from intervention mechanism and towards more direct aid for producers. I am confident that those forms of support will help the beef industry in Wales to meet the changing demands of the marketplace.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of set-aside acreages in each of the counties of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

	5 year scheme acres	1 year scheme acres
Clwyd	303·20	Nil
Dyfed	2,655·29	54·36
Mid Glamorgan	Nil	85·40
South Glamorgan	335·82	Nil
West Glamorgan	483·05	Nil
Gwent	856·31	Nil
Gwynedd	217·53	Nil
Powys	385·29	95·37
Total	5,236·49	235·13

The one-year set-aside scheme ends on 31 August 1992.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the figures on a county basis in Wales for 1991-92 of (a) the number of serious irregularities of the set-aside scheme, (b) the number of minor breaches of the scheme and (c) the number of cases where payments were withheld in full or in part; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Information to date for the 1991-92 set-aside year, which ends in September is as follows:

(a) Serious irregularities—nil
(b) Minor breaches—one (in Dyfed)
(c) Payments withheld—no claims have yet been submitted.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount of payments under the set-aside scheme in Wales which have been recovered or withheld in each region in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Claims for the 1991-92 set-aside year have not yet been submitted. Recoveries relating to 1990-91 payments amount so far to £1,431·40. The recoveries all arose from the exercise by farmers of the option to change from permanent fallow to another category of set-aside.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers have received payments under the set-aside scheme in 1991 in each county in Wales for (a) horse-based activities, (b) golf courses, (c) game cover for commercial shoots, (d) sports grounds, (e) other recreational facilities and (f) other uses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The numbers of farmers in Wales who received payments for the set-aside scheme year 1990-91 for non-agricultural use are as follows:

	Dyfed	Gwynedd	Powys	Gwent	West Glamorgan	Clwyd
a Horse-based activities	4	Nil	1	1	2	1
b Golf courses	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	1

Upland Areas

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he proposes to assist the upland communities of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department, together with other organisations, including the Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Wales tourist board, provides significant resources for the development of the economic, social and environmental fabric of our upland communities and to secure for them the long-term prosperity which is the common objective of us all. I will continue to review my policies in response to identified demands.

Farming Accidents

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the number of accidents and fatalities in the farming industry for each of the last three years.

Mr. David Hunt: The figures are shown in the table:

Injuries to employees[1] in agriculture[2] in Wales reported to the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many enterprise zones exist in Wales; what were their dates of creation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: There are three enterprise zones in Wales:

Zone	Date of designation
Delyn	21 July 1983
Milford Haven Waterway	24 April 1984
Lower Swansea Valley No. 2	6 March 1983

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of jobs existing on each of the Welsh enterprise zones.

Mr. David Hunt: The most recent official estimates of employment in enterprise zones relate to December 1989. Employment in the zones in Wales was estimated to be:

Lower Swansea Valley (zones 1 and 2)—4,200.
Delyn—2,600.
Milford Haven Waterway—2,100.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the full cost and benefits of each of the enterprise zones including tax and capital allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Costs and benefits are not calculated for individual enterprise zones. An interim evaluation of the enterprise zone scheme was carried out by consultants and the results were published in 1987. A copy of that report was placed in the Library. A final evaluation of the scheme is in progress.

The Department of the Environment also publishes, on an annual basis, "Enterprise Zone Information". Copies of that document are also placed in the Library.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the numbers and grades of officials in his Department who are involved specifically with hospital trust applications, indicating whether they are wholly or partly engaged on this work.

Mr. David Hunt: Six full-time staff work specifically on NHS trust issues:

	Number
Grade 7	[1]3
Higher Executive Officer	1
Executive Officer	1
Administrative Officer	1

[1] Including two NHS secondees.

Other officials across the Department provide input as appropriate.

Sign Language Services

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will assist the Welsh counties and the Wales Council for the Deaf to set up sign language interpreting services in Wales at least equal to those applying in England.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The promotion of training and the conduct of examinations in communication skills for deaf people, including sign language interpreting, are carried out by the Council for the Advance of Communication with Deaf People, a voluntary organisation set up for that purpose. The number of trained interpreters has increased rapidly over the past 10 years, and although available services tend to be centred on the main centres of population such as London and Manchester, they are gradually spreading to other parts, including Wales. The examinations conducted by CACDP, based at the university of Durham, are open to people from Wales. CACDP has worked in conjunction with Wales Council for the Deaf, and there should therefore be no need to set up a separate organisation in Wales.

In recognition of the importance of developing sign language interpreting services in Wales, and to aid that process, Wales Council for the Deaf has also been awarded £141,264 in grant aid for the 1992-93 financial year, part of which is to fund a sign language communications project.

Food Safety

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure that disabled people in Wales or Welsh people who have experienced serious injury or illness are not precluded from the therapeutic or rehabilitative benefit of participation in catering and domestic tasks in residential homes as a result of the application of regulations consequent on the Food Safety Act 1990.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Food Safety Act does not prohibit anyone in residential or sheltered accommodation from preparing their own meals or beverages. However, the Food Hygiene (General) Regulations 1970, as amended, set out the controls necessary for the hygienic preparation of food other than in domestic settings. Environmental health departments advise on controls bearing in mind the nature of any food safety risk, including the type of food handled and the preparation involved. Residents may assist staff in the kitchen if the hygiene controls can be satisfied.

Economic Forum for Wales

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to establish the planned Economic Forum for Wales; and if he will be publishing a White Paper.

Mr. David Hunt: A consultation paper seeking views on how the council would operate will be issued in the near future.

Disabling Conditions (Treatment)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to reduce the waiting time for treatment of specific disabling conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I intend to strengthen and extend the guarantees in the patients charter for Wales by introducing two additional guarantees, which will take effect from 1 April 1993.

No patient in Wales will have to wait more than 18 months for a hip or knee replacement or cataract operation. Those conditions can reduce the quality of life and merit priority attention. I shall expect health authorities in Wales to make full use of the services provided by the treatment centres that I have established to ensure that that commitment is met.

I shall also introduce a guarantee that no patient in Wales will have to wait longer than one month for urgent in-patient or day case treatment. This is already a management target to which health authorities are committed.

In order to assist authorities in Wales to achieve the patients charter guarantees, additional funding of £1 million will be made available to district health authorities and to GP fund holders, through family health authorities under the 1992-93 waiting times initiative.

Ysgol Derwyn School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review his financial allocations in order that the Ysgol Derwyn CP school, Higher Kinnerton might extend the number of classrooms and eliminate the need for temporary classrooms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: No. It is for local authorities to determine the distribution of resources made available to them between services and projects in the light of their view of local needs and priorities.

Council House Sales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will allow Alyn and Deeside council to use the capital receipts it has retained from the sale of council housing.

Mr. David Hunt: The legislation does not allow the release of receipts already set aside to meet credit liabilities except where a council has no overall debt, nor do I believe it would be right to do so. It is prudent financial management that a proportion of the receipts from council house sales should reduce debt incurred in construction. As at 31 March 1991, Alyn and Deeside had total debt of £32·97 million, of which £22·27 million was council housing—housing revenue account—debt.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to make any representations to the Government of Turkey concerning the initiation of political dialogue with the Kurds of north-west Turkey; what recent reports he has received about the treatment of Kurds in Turkey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed human rights issues with the Turkish Foreign Minister during his visit to Turkey in April. We welcome Prime Minister Demirel's recognition of a Kurdish identity and his Government's intention to make human rights improvements a top priority. We look forward to the early implementation of the Government's programme of democratic and human rights reform.

Thailand

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what provisions are being made by Her Majesty's Government for proper legal representation for British subjects facing trial in Thailand.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British embassy in Bangkok, like British embassies and consular posts elsewhere, ensures that British nationals who are detained understand how to obtain legal representation. The embassy holds an up-to-date list of English-speaking lawyers, which is offered to all British detainees.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps were taken by British consular officials to draw the attention of the Thai courts to Ms Cahill's juvenile British legal status at the time of sentencing.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Thai authorities were aware of Miss Cahill's age. She was tried and sentenced in a juvenile court. The British embassy has strongly supported her petition for a royal pardon on the grounds of her youth and immaturity at the time the offence was committed.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are currently being made by Her Majesty's Government in support of the British women, Patricia Cahill and Kathryn Smith, imprisoned in Thailand.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our embassy in Bangkok has submitted to the Thai authorities petitions from both girls for a royal pardon. The embassy gave both petitions strong support.

Each month a member of staff of the embassy visits the girls. With money provided by family, friends and Prisoners Abroad, our embassy helps them with the purchase of food, cosmetics, toiletries and so on. Our embassy also provides books and magazines and has arranged for vaccinations.

Slovenia

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect of United Nations' sanctions against Serbia on Slovenia's tourist trade; and what restrictions have been placed on payments to Slovenian hoteliers or the Slovenian national airline Adria.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made no specific assessment of the impact on the Slovenian tourist industry of United Nations sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro. There are, however, no prohibitions on payments to Slovenian hoteliers or the Slovenian national airline.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being offered to the newly independent country of Slovenia to provide services for the refugees arriving from Croatia and Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The relief effort in all the former Yugoslav republics, much of it involving assistance to refugees, is being led by the United Nations humanitarian agencies and the International Committee of the Red Cross. Since last November the United Kingdom has given £9·7 million for its work.

Entry Clearance Officers

Mr. Madden: to ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for reducing the establishment of entry clearance officers in British posts in the Indian sub-continent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The staffing complement at posts in the Indian sub-continent is reviewed annually on the basis of demand for entry clearances. A slow-down in the number of people applying, coupled with increased operational efficiency, may lead to possible savings, but final decisions have yet to be taken. Any reductions will be phased in and will not adversely affect waiting times for settlement applicants or the ability of the post to offer a same-day service to genuine visit visa applicants.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for deploying entry clearance officers to British posts in the Russian federation and other states in each and central Europe; how many entry clearance officers are now in post in those countries; and what establishment in each country he proposes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are four entry clearance officers at the British embassy in Moscow.

An entry clearance section will be established at the consulate-general in St. Petersburg as soon as suitable accommodation is available. We are considering what services our embassy in Alma Ata, to open this autumn, should provide. We will open an entry clearance section at the embassy in Kiev as soon as an office can be located.

Nationals of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania travelling on national passports do not require visas for short visits to the United Kingdom. There are no visa-issuing facilities currently at our posts at Riga, Tallinn or Vilnius.

Nationals of the states of what was fomerly Yugoslavia do not require visas for short visits to the United Kingdom. Entry clearances can already be obtained from the embassy at Belgrade. Consideration will be given to the establishment of an entry clearance section at Ljubljana when we open an embassy there.

There are three entry clearance officers in Bucharest and one at each of the embassies in Belgrade, Budapest, Prague and Sofia. Following the abolition of the visa requirement for Poles, the number of full-time entry clearance officers at Warsaw will be reduced from six to two over the coming months.

Persons who require visas for the United Kingdom and who reside in a country where we do not have an entry clearance section may apply to any British visa-issuing office.

Rudolf Hess

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his present estimate of the date of release of remaining Foreign Office files FO/1093 (pieces 1 to 5) on the Rudolf Hess case to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The second batch of the Hess files in the FO 1093 series should be released to the Public Record Office in early July.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now release the files relating to Rudolf Hess for the period since the Nuremburg trials.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All Foreign and Commonwealth Office files relating to Rudolf Hess for the period since the Nuremberg trials and up to 1961 are now open at the Public Record Office. Records since 1962 will be released as provided for in the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967, 30 years after their creation.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 15 June.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 15 June.

The Council discussed the Commission's future financing proposals. As at the Economic and Finance Council on 9 June, a large number of member states expressed serious doubts about the Commission package. The Council had a brief discussion on the administrative arrangements for the proposed new Committee of the Regions established under the treaty on European union. Ministers also discussed preparations for the European Council in Lisbon on 26 and 27 June.

The Council considerd a communication on Community relations with Japan and adopted conclusions outlining the Community's approach. Ministers issued a declaration on Yugoslavia supporting the United Nations initiative to re-open Sarajevo airport to allow humanitarian help into Bosnia-Herzegovina. They also endorsed Lord Carrington's continuing peace efforts in Bosnia and urged restraint on Serbs, Albanians and Kosovars to defuse the situation in Kosovo.

The Council discussed the development of the Community's relations with the Maghreb and agreed that permanent representatives should examine the question further. The Council considered the Swiss application to join the Community and agreed to refer the application to the Commission for its opinion.

Vietnamese Migrants

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Vietnamese migrants.

Mr. Goodlad: On 19 June, 38 Vietnamese illegal immigrants were repatriated from Hong Kong to Vietnam on the first flight under the final stage of the orderly repatriation programme. The operation, which was carried out in accordance with international practice, went smoothly.

The group comprised migrants who had arrived in Hong Kong before 29 October 1991. All had undergone the full screening and appeal procedure vetted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and been found not to be refugees.

Since the orderly repatriation programme was announced on 29 October 1991, there has been a dramatic drop in the number of arrivals in Hong Kong, accompanied by a surge in applications for voluntary repatriation. We hope that most of the non-refugees still in Hong Kong will now volunteer to return. Already, more than 20,000 non-refugees have returned to Vietnam from the region without a single substantiated case of persecution.

It does no service to the genuine refugee to classify him among those who are merely seeking a better life abroad. The clearing of the Hong Kong camps will enable genuine refugees to be properly looked after and resettled as appropriate.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Alternative Energy

Mr. Etherington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all alternative energy projects receiving grants from his Department by (a) level of grant, (b) institution or body administering the grant and (c) date of completion.

Mr. Eggar: Given the number of such projects receiving grants from my Department, I shall write to the hon. Member with the list he requests and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Protective Equipment

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether, if a product passses the relevant European standard under the personal protective equipment directive, the product automatically complies with the directive even if the committee working on the standard has widened the scope for more products to be exempt.

Mr. Sainsbury: The personal protective equipment directive (89/686/EEC) lays down certain requirements and specifies categories of equipment to which they apply. The relevant European standards-making body is drawing up standards for manufacturers to follow, as part of compliance procedures. The scope of the directive cannot be altered by the technical committee drawing on these standards, but only by the EC Council.

RECHAR

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement relating to the distribution of RECHAR moneys in East Durham.

Mr. Sainsbury: East Durham is part of the Durham RECHAR programme area, which has been allocated £8·7 million of RECHAR grants for 1992 and 1993. The programme is now under way. A seminar was held for prospective applicants and a first round of applications has been invited for 26 June. A programme monitoring committee, chaired by an official of my Department, will be responsible for the selection of projects to receive grants. The committee will be formally constituted on 25 June.

EC Structural Funds

Ms. Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's position in the discussions with EC Industry Ministers in Lisbon on 15 May concerning the future of EC structural funds.

Mr. Sainsbury: I represented the United Kingdom at the informal meeting of EC Regional Policy Ministers which took place in Lisbon on 15 and 16 May. As this was an informal meeting, no decisions were taken. Discussion concentrated on a number of issues which will be central to the review of the structural funds regulations—due to take place by the end of 1993—notably the simplification of administrative procedures and the application of the principles of programming, partnership and subsidiarity.

Japanese Cars

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the proposal from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission concerning voluntary restraints on imports of Japanese-built cars.

Mr. Sainsbury: The existing voluntary restraint on imports of Japanese cars agreed between the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders and its Japanese counterpart will be discontinued at the end of this year in accordance with the agreement between the EC and Japan concluded last year, known as "The Elements of Consensus". It is open to the Government to decide whether the United Kingdom should be a restricted market from 1 January 1993 for the purposes of the implementation of this agreement. I expect to take a decision on this matter before the end of this year.

Energy Tax

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with his counterparts in the European Commission responsible for energy policy concerning the carbon/energy tax proposals agreed by the Commission at its meeting on 13 May; what proposals he has for its implementation at United Kingdom level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: While the general issue of energy/carbon taxation has been discussed at a number of Councils, including the Energy Council, the proposals which the Commission has recently agreed have not yet been formally issued to member states. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who is responsible for taxation in the United Kingdom, will take the lead in responding to the proposals when they have been received and carefully considered.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to review the policy instruments by which regional assistance to industry is delivered; if he will co-ordinate such a review with the assisted areas map review he announced on 9 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Regional policy instruments are kept under continuing review.

Mr. Morgan To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultation he has had with the Director General of Electricity Supply regarding alterations of (a) the regulatory price mechanisms for the regional electricity companies for England and Wales and (b) the 1998 limit for the loss of franchise over domestic and small customers by the regional electricity companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I meet the Director General of Electricity Supply from time to time and discuss matters of mutual interest.

The price control conditions in the public electricity supply licences are subject to modification as provided for in the Electricity Act 1989 and those licences. The franchise restrictions, and their expiry in 1998, remain as provided for in second-tier supply licences.

National Grid Company

Mr. Rhodri Morgan To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had regarding the statutory restrictions on the sale or flotation of the National Grid Company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have received no such representations.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Tony Banks To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the annual Government expenditure on research and development for renewable energy sources since 1979-80; and what are the provisional estimates for expenditure in 1992-93 and 1993-94 expressed in money terms and at 1991-92 prices.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 June 1992]: For 1979-80 to 1989-90, I refer the hon. Member to the reply on 21 November 1991, Official Report, columns 260-62. Outturn expenditure under the renewables energy budget for 1991 was £0·6 million higher than the estimated provision for that year of £24·0 million. Provision for 1992-93 is £24·3 million—£23·1 million in 1991-92 prices. Expenditure for 1993-94 will be determined in the course of the public expenditure survey exercise.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 209

SESSION 1992–93

8th June—19th June 1992

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
